MEANING OF TERMS

USED IN CLASSIFYING ANNOTATING CASES.

THE different expressions used to describe the effect of the annotating cases have the following meanings, and the classification of the annotating cases has been done strictly in accordance with these meanings. The annotating cases, except such as are classified as "Mentioned," are grouped according to the points in the case which they annotate: within these groups they are listed chronologically, except such as are classified as "Referred to," which come at the end of the group and are arranged inter se in chronological order. Cases which annotate the annotated case generally are grouped together after cases which annotate specific points, similarly arranged, and are followed by cases classified as "Mentioned" arranged chronologically inter se. The terms used in classifying the annotating cases are as follows:—

- "APPLIED" (Apld.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the principle of law enunciated in the annotated case has been applied to a new set of facts and circumstances in the annotating case.
- "APPROVED" (Apprvd.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the annotated case has been considered to be good law in the annotating case where the latter is in a higher court than the former.
- "CONSIDERED" (Consd.).—This expression is used where the remarks in the annotating case are devoid of adverse criticism and merely denote the giving of more or less careful consideration to the annotated case.
- "DISTINGUISHED" (Distd.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but where some essential difference (either on the facts or in law) between it and the annotated case is pointed out.
- "DOUBTED" (Dbtd.).—This expression is used where the court in the annotating case without definitely going to the length of saying that the annotated case is wrong, adduces reasons which seem to show that it is not accurate.
- "EXPLAINED" (Expld.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but the decision arrived at is justified or accounted for by calling attention to some point of fact or of law which is usually, but not necessarily, one not obvious on the face of the report.
- "EXTENDED" (Extd.).—Compare "APPLIED," supra.
- "FOLLOWED" (Folld.).—This expression is used to denote that the same principles of law are applied in the two cases. It does not necessarily imply that the facts are substantially identical in the two cases.
- "NOT FOLLOWED" (N.F.).—Compare "FOLLOWED," supra, to which it is the adverse.
- "OVERRULED" (Overd.).—This expression is used where the annotating case is on substantially identical facts with the annotated case and in a higher court and the rule in the latter case is held to be wrong.
- "REFERRED" (Refd.).—This expression is used only where the annotating case deals with the point of the Digest paragraph and is without comment of any definite character on the case annotated, and where there is no delicate shade of approval or disapproval which would justify the use of any of the foregoing words.
- "MENTIONED" (Mentd.).—This expression is used only where none of the foregoing terms apply. In other words, it is used only where the case annotated is cited on a point having nothing to do with the point in the Digest paragraph.

SECT. 4.—ACQUISITION OF LAND.

See Small Holdings & Allotments Act, 1908 (c. 36), ss. 38–47, 61; Land Settlement (Facilities) Act, 1919 (c. 59), ss. 2–9, 16, 28–30, sched. I; Small Holdings & Allotments Act, 1926 (c. 52), ss. 4, 17, 18.

1. *Compulsory purchase—The order—Nature—Whether certiorari to quash granted.]—*The effect of Small Holdings & Allotments Act, 1908 (c. 36), s. 39 (3), is that an order for the compulsory acquisition of land under that Act which has been confirmed by the Board of Agriculture & Fisheries is final, & has the effect of an Act of Parliament. Certiorari, therefore, will not be granted to bring up & quash such an order.—Ex p. RINGER (1909), 73 J. P. 436; 25 T. L. R. 718; 53 Sol. Jo. 745; 7 L. G. R. 1041, D. C.

2. *— — — — —.]—*Land Settlement (Facilities) Act, 1919 (c. 59), s. 10 (1), does not require that the previous consent of the Board of Agriculture & Fisheries should be obtained before a council make an order for the compulsory acquisition of land under sect. 1, sub-sect. 1 of the Act, but only that that consent be obtained before the council exercise the power conferred upon them by the order by proceeding actually to acquire the land by giving notice to treat or otherwise.

A county council, after holding an inquiry in regard to the matter at which all necessary parties were represented, made an order under the Small Holdings & Allotments Act, 1908 (c. 36), & Land Settlement (Facilities) Act, 1919 (c. 59), for the compulsory acquisition of a farm for the purposes of these Acts. On an application by the owner of the farm for a writ of certiorari to remove the order into the High Ct. on the ground that the council had made it without jurisdiction, inasmuch as they had not obtained the previous consent of the Board of Agriculture:—Held: the order was not merely administrative but quasi-judicial in character, it affected appct. personally & not only as one of the public or of a section thereof, & he had not in fact waived any right which he would otherwise have had to the relief which he claimed, & if he made good the ground of his application, he was entitled to the writ ex debito justitiæ.—R. v. BEDFORDSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL, Ex p. SEAR, [1920] 2 K. B. 465; 89 L. J. K. B. 425; 123 L. T. 50; 84 J. P. 97; 36 T. L. R. 369; 18 L. G. R. 249, D. C.

5. *— — — — — Wilful refusal to convey.]—*After an order for compulsory purchase of land had been duly confirmed under Small Holdings & Allotments Act, 1908 (c. 36), s. 39 (3), the solr. for the owner wrote that he was advised by counsel that the order might be bad, & subsequently he wrote again refusing to convey, alleging the same advice:—Held: there had been a wilful refusal to convey within Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 18), s. 80.—Re JONES & CARDIGANSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL (1913), 57 Sol. Jo. 374.

6. *Compensation—Incorporation of Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20)—Unworked minerals.]—*The N. county council acting under powers conferred by Small Holdings & Allotments Act, 1908 (c. 36), & an order of the Board of Agriculture, gave notice to the owner of a farm that they required to purchase the same for small holdings. The order made under the Act of 1908 incorporated Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20), ss. 77, 78. The arbitrator was of opinion that the true measure of the compensation payable to the owner was the value to him immediately before the giving of the notice to treat of the lands required to be taken by the county council, without taking into consideration as an element tending to reduce this value the risk of the land being injured at some future time by the

c. *— Land used for fruit growing.]—*The lessee of 10 acres of land on which he had planted raspberry bushes, the fruit from which he sold mainly to jam-makers & sometimes outright to fruit dealers, was not entitled to have himself declared a "landholder," the land being a market garden & excluded from the operation of Small Landholders (Scotland) Act, 1911, by sect. 26 (3) (d).—YEAMAN v. GREWAR (1916), 53 Sc. L. R. 596.—SCOT.

d. *— Cottage with garden, arable land & share of common grazing.]—*The subjects consisting of a small thatched cottage in a village in Argyllshire, with a plot of garden ground & a byre, & one rood of potato land situated at a short distance from the cottage, & a one fifteenth share in a common grazing extending to 58 acres for the grazing of one cow, all let to one tenant at a cumulo rent of £4 4s. 6d., is a "holding" within Small Landholders (Scotland) Act, 1911.—MALCOLM v. M'DOUGALL, [1916] S. C. 283.—SCOT.

e. — Land & buildings valued

f. *— Land & dwelling-house not required for agricultural purposes.]—*Where, at the date of Small Landholders Act, 1911, coming into operation, there existed on land, held on such a tenancy that it would otherwise constitute a "holding," a dwelling-house or other building forming an integral & material part of the subjects of tenancy but not erected or required for agricultural or pastoral purposes, such dwelling-house or other building with the pertinents & site thereof might be excised from the land held on such tenancy, leaving the remainder a statutory "holding" under the Act.—M'NEILL v. HAMILTON (DUKE), [1918] S. C. 221; [1918] 1 S. L. T. 265.—SCOT.

g. *— Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1908—House & land—Licence to sell liquor.]—*At the commencement of Small Landholders Act, 1911, the yearly tenant of a dwelling-house & 10½ acres of arable land held a licence for the sale of porter & ale, which he sold to occasional customers, the amount of trade done by him in this way being very small. The house was not larger than a suitable dwelling-house for the holding; no part of it was fitted up as an inn or public-house; & no travellers were received as lodgers there:—Held: the subjects were not prevented, by reason of the trade carried on therein, from being a "holding" within the Acts.—TAYLOR v. FORDYCE, [1918] S. C. 824; [1918] 2 S. L. T. 186.—SCOT.

h. *Status of landholder—Who entitled.]—*Small Landholders (Scotland) Act, 1911, s. 2 (1) (iii) (a), enacts that it shall be a condition of a tenant or leaseholder being entitled to the status of a landholder "that such tenant or leaseholder or his predecessor in the same family has provided or paid for the whole or the greater part of the buildings or other permanent improvements on the holding":—Held: the words "predecessor in the same family" included predecessors other than the immediate predecessor.—IRVINE v. FORDYCE, [1927] S. C. 72.—SCOT.

working of the minerals under the land in the event of their not being required by the county council to be left unworked under the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20).—Held: it must be assumed that the arbitrator had come to the conclusion that there was nothing to prevent the remedy provided by Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20), ss. 77, 78, being a sufficient one for this future risk; & that being so it could not be said he had proceeded on any erroneous principle in making his award.—CARLISLE (EARL) v. NORTHUMBERLAND COUNTY COUNCIL (1911), 105 L. T. 797; 75 J. P. 539; 10 L. G. R. 50.

7. — Outgoing tenant—Cost of refreshment supplied at sale.—A county council agreed with an outgoing tenant in accordance with Small Holdings Act, 1910 (c. 34), to pay compensation for the loss or expense directly attributable to the quitting which the tenant might unavoidably incur in connection with the sale or removal of his household goods, stock, etc., the amount to be settled by arbn. The tenant on quitting the holding sold his implements & stock by auction. The umpire in his final award disallowed the tenant (a) £34 11s. 8d. costs of refreshments supplied at the sale, but found as a fact that the amount was reasonable, & that it was customary & desirable to supply refreshment at such sales; he allowed the tenant (b) £21 valuation fee, costs of valuing stock before the sale; (c) £181 loss on compulsory sale; (d) £2 2s. costs of preparing agreement with the council. Each party was to bear their or his own costs of the arbn.:—Held: (1) (a) was a reasonably necessary expense in connection with the sale & ought to be allowed to the tenant; (b) was not an unavoidable expense of the sale, but rather was part of the costs of the arbn., & as such ought to be disallowed; (c) was a loss directly attributable to the quitting, unavoidably incurred in connection with the sale, & ought to be allowed; (d) was not an expense of the sale & ought to be disallowed; (2) the outgoing tenant was free to choose whether he would remove his stock or sell, & was under no obligation to remove to another farm if he had one or one was available.—Re EVANS & GLAMORGAN COUNTY COUNCIL (1912), 76 J. 12. — Notice to quit—Validity.—An agreement for a yearly tenancy of a small holding provided that the tenancy might be determined by a six months' written notice expiring at any Michaelmas. On Mar. 21, 1917, the agent for the landlords sent to deft., who was in arrear with his rent, a written notice to quit on Oct. 11 (old Michaelmas Day), 1917. The notice to quit was enclosed in a letter in which the agent said, "I am instructed

Labourers (Ir.) Act, 1883, s. 15, which enables the former owner of land, compulsorily acquired in fee by a district council for the purpose of the Act, to require the land to be reconveyed to him upon failure by the district council to make arrangements for the erection of the labourers' dwellings within two years after the confirmation of the Provisional Order, are not extended by Labourers (Ir.) n. Right of Farm Board to take possession of land—On failure of purchaser to pay instalments due.—2 Geo. 5 (1912), c. 28, which created the Farm Settlement Board, provides that when a purchaser of land from the Board fails to pay his instalments as they become due, the Board may "take possession" of such land on giving one month's notice "of its intention so to do," & "on so taking possession" may deal with the land as it might have done in the first instance:—Held: before the Board could dispose of land after default in payment by a purchaser it must not only give notice of its intention to take possession, but actually take possession, & a second agreement of sale purporting to give a second purchaser the right to possession did not convey any right to possession against the first purchaser.—*WILSON v. p. — Fixing fair rent for holding—What Land Court should consider.—Two joint tenants of a holding in the Island of Arran of which defenders were proprietors applied to the Land Ct. for an order fixing a first fair rent to be paid for their holding:—Held: in fixing a fair rent for a small holding under Crofters Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1886, s. 6 (1), the Land Ct. were not bound to exclude from consideration as tenant's improvements such improvements as were executed by the tenant or his predecessors in the same family in implement of a specific agreement in writing to execute them.—MAKINNON v. HAMILTON'S (DUKE) TRUSTEES, [1918] S. C. 274.—SCOT.

q. — Tenants of a holding presented an application to the Land Ct. for the fixing of a fair rent in the character of landholders, & parties were heard on the application. Thereafter the Land Ct., being of opinion that the greater part of the improvements were not provided by the tenants, amended the application at their own hand so as to make it apply to proceedings at the instance of statutory small tenants, &, without hearing parties further, proceeded to fix an equitable rent and the period of renewal of the tenancy:—Held: the amendment was competent, but the ct. were bound to give the landlord an opportunity of being heard on any objections he might have to state under Small Landholders (Scotland) Act, 1911, s. 32 (4).—FULLARTON v. HAMILTON'S (DUKE) TRUSTEES, [1918] S. C. 292.—SCOT.

by the Small Holdings & Allotments Committee to serve upon you the enclosed notice to quit, which is intended to terminate your tenancy at Michaelmas next unless they see sufficient reason in the meantime to change their opinion." The tenant claimed that the notice was a conditional notice & therefore invalid. In Mar. 1916, a notice to quit had also been given to deft., whose rent was in arrear, but this notice was withdrawn at deft.'s request upon his paying the rent due:—Held: the covering letter on its true construction, read in the light of what happened in the previous year, did not introduce into the notice to quit a condition or a reservation of right to pl'tfs., & the notice was valid.—*NORFOLK COUNTY COUNCIL v. 13. Compulsory hiring—Alleged breaches of covenant by local authority—Notice to remedy breaches.]—In 1906 a local authority, under their statutory powers, obtained compulsorily a lease of land & sublet it in allotments to numerous persons. The lease contained covenants by the local authority to keep the land clean & in good heart & condition. In June, 1909, the lessor served the local authority with a notice under Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 14 (1), directed to the whole of the land, & alleging, generally, breaches of the covenants, & requiring the same to be remedied within a reasonable time. In the following Nov. he issued a writ alleging that the breaches had not been remedied & claiming to re-enter. The local authority denied the breaches. At the trial of the action the lessor's evidence showed that all the allotments were in a bad condition when the notice was given, that some of them were clean at the date of the writ, but that it would take at least a year from the date of the notice to put the whole of the land in good condition. On this the local authority objected that a reasonable time had not been allowed to remedy the breaches:—Held: as the notice was in general terms & directed to the whole of the land it was not divisible, & as a sufficient time had not been allowed to remedy all the breaches, the action was premature & must be dismissed.—HOPLEY v. TARVIN PARISH COUNCIL (1910), 74 J. P. 209.

15. — Right to break up pasture.]—Small Holdings & Allotments Act, 1908 (c. 36), sched. I., Part II., clause (2) (b), as amended by Land Settlement (Facilities) Act, 1919 (c. 59), s. 25 (1), sched. II., provides that an order made by the council of a borough, urban district or parish, for the compulsory hiring of land for the purpose of providing allotments "shall not authorise the breaking up of pasture unless the Board" of Agriculture & Fisheries "are satisfied that it can be so broken up without depreciating the value of the land, or that the circumstances are such that small holdings or allotments, as the case may be, cannot otherwise be successfully cultivated." Where an order had been made under the Acts by a borough council for the compulsory hiring for allotments of a piece of land consisting entirely of pasture:—Held: in considering whether the breaking up of the pasture should be authorised, the Board must have regard to the particular piece of land alone, & need not be satisfied that there was no other land in the neighbourhood which could be successfully cultivated as allotments without the breaking up of pasture.—KNOWLES v. SALFORD CORPN., [1922] 1 Ch. 328; 91 L. J. Ch. 406; 126 L. T. 729; 86 J. P. 97; 38 T. L. R. 316; 66 Sol. Jo. 332; 20 L. G. R. 337, C. A.

Injunction to restrain—Matter under consideration by Ministry of Agriculture.]—Where an order, purporting to be made under the Small Holdings & Allotments Acts, 1908–1919, has been made by a county council to enforce its compulsory powers of hiring land, but the council has not complied with the conditions precedent imposed by Small Holdings & Allotments Act, 1908 (c. 36), s. 7 (2), namely, that the council has been unable to acquire suitable land elsewhere on reasonable terms, the ct. will not, in view of the provisions of sect. 39, sub-sect. 3, grant an injunction to restrain the council from proceeding upon the order, if at the time of the application for the injunction the Board of Agriculture already has seisin of the matter & an inquiry by the Board is in progress as to whether the Board should confirm the order.—REDDAWAY v. LANCASHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL (1925), 41 T. L. R. 422.

17. Compulsory purchase—Suitability of land—Reasonability of price—Local authority prima facie judges.]—(1) An urban district council who, having failed to obtain suitable land for allotments by agreement, seek to acquire land in their district compulsorily, are prima facie the judges as to what land is suitable for the purpose & whether they can acquire it at a reasonable price within the ambits of the statute.

(2) "Suitable for allotments prima facie means land as to which the council, after having taken into consideration the entire circumstances of each case, came to the conclusion that for their purpose it is suitable, & may reasonably be expected to recoup the purchase-money out of rents to be paid by the allotment holders.

(3) The effect of Land Settlement (Facilities) Act, 1919 (c. 59), s. 1 (1), which provides that an order for compulsory acquisition of land made after the passing of the Act & before the expiration of three years from that date need not be confirmed by the Board of Agriculture & Fisheries, is that the making of the order shall be conclusive evidence that it has been duly made, that the requirements of Small Holdings & Allotments Act, 1908 (c. 36), have been complied with & that the order of the council is intra vires that statute.—*WOODFORD LAND & BUILDING CO., LTD. v. 20. Letting of allotment — Under municipal bye-law—Land not held for charitable use or trust—Invalidity of bye-law.]—A.-G. v. STAFFORD CORPN., [1878] W. N. 74.

21. — Under private Act — Extension of borough—Right of residents in added area.]—By a private inclosure Act provision was made for allotments to be held by the deputies of the freemen in trust for freemen, or their widows, resident within the borough. Application had to be made to the deputies for any such allotment, & any person aggrieved with their decision could appeal to the justices of the borough in petty or special sessions, whose determination was "to be final & conclusive, & not removable by certiorari, or any other writ or process whatsoever, into any of Her Majesty's cts. of record. By the borough Act, 1891, the borough had been enlarged to include certain areas called "the added areas." Appct., a freeman of the borough, & resident in one of the added areas, applied to the deputies for an allotment, but his application was refused on the ground that he was not resident within the borough as constituted at the time of the enactment of the private inclosure Act. He appealed to the justices who granted his application, but at the request of the deputies they stated a case under Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (c. 49), s. 33:—Held: (1) upon a preliminary objection to the appeal, as by Interpretation Act, 1889 (c. 63), s. 13, the words "ct. of summary jurisdiction" include justices sitting under any Acts other than Summary Jurisdiction Acts, the justices here formed a ct. of summary jurisdiction from which an appeal lay by a case stated under Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (c. 49), s. 33; (2) on the merits, the extension of the limits of the borough carried with it the extension of the area of the residential privilege.—*LEICESTER BOROUGH (DEPUTIES OF FREEMEN) v. effect.—Sect. 4 of the above Act (which corresponds with sect. 4 of the English Act of 1895) is not retrospective, & does not entitle tenants under leases current at the commencement of

22. Sale of allotment land—Right of Charity Commissioners.]—Allotments Extension Act, 1882 (c. 80), has not taken away from the Charity Comrs. the power of authorising a sale of charity lands vested in them under Charitable Trusts Act, 1853 (c. 137), & Charitable Trusts Amendment Act, 1855 (c. 124).—SUTTON PARISH TO CHURCH (1884), 26 Ch. D. 173 ; 53 L. J. Ch. 599 ; 50 L. T. 387 ; 32 W. R. 485.

23. Exemption from taxation.]—By a private inclosure Act in 1763, certain spaces of C. common were allotted to the corp'n. of York, in trust for the freemen inhabitants of B. ward in that city, as compensation for previous rights of common. In 1632, by agreement with the lord of the manor, the fourth part of the adjoining common of H., afterwards called the "Intack," was conveyed in fee to the mayor of York, in satisfaction of the common rights of the freemen inhabitants of B. ward. The allotments of C. common & the Intack had ever since been enjoyed by the freemen inhabitants of B. ward, & were under the control of pasture masters, who, after paying the expenses of management, applied the profits of the whole to the benefit of poor freemen, & also for some years past for the benefit of their widows:—Held: the profits of the allotments which were applied under the Act of 1763 were exempt from corp'n. duty under sub-s. 2 of s. 11 of the Inland Revenue Act, 1885 (c. 51), s. 11 (2) ; but the profits of the Intack, not being appropriated & applied under any Act of Parliament, were not exempt under that sub-sect.—*INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. 24. What amounts to allotment — Allotments & Cottage Gardens Compensation for Crops Act, 1887 (c. 26).]—By above Act, s. 4, "allotment" means (inter alia), "any parcel of land of not more than 2 acres in extent held by a tenant under a landlord & cultivated as a garden":—Held: a piece of land less than 2 acres in extent, occupied by a seedsman for the purposes of his business, & having in it vegetables, fruit trees, & flowering plants which he sold, was not "cultivated as a garden," & was, therefore, not an "allotment" within sect. 4.—*COOPER v. See Solicitors Act, 1860 (c. 127), s. 1; Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), ss. 99 (4), 215 (1); Charters, 1845, 1872, 1903, 1909.

Part II.—Admission and Registration.

SECT. 1.—CONDITIONS OF ADMISSION.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

1. Age—Minor not admissible.]—A minor is not admissible as an attorney.—Ex p. EVANS (1838), 2 J. P. 39; 2 Jur. 47.

2. ———.]—A person who is under age cannot be examined for admission as an attorney.—Ex p. CRAGG (1838), 6 Dowl. 256; 1 Will. Woll. & H. 34.

Annotation:—Reid. Ex p. Tebbs (1840), 4 J. P. 749.

3. ———.]—An articled clerk who is under age, but will become of age a few days after the term, may be examined for the purpose of being admitted the following term.—Ex p. TEBBS (1840), Woll. 16; 4 J. P. 749; 4 Jur. 1014.

4. ———.]—An articled clerk who is under age but will become of age shortly after the next term may be examined for the purpose of being admitted as an attorney early in the following term if there are special circumstances which show that it is an object to him to be admitted early.—Ex p. BOUSFIELD (1841), Woll. 195; 10 L. J. Q. B. 361; 5 Jur. 772.

5. ———.]—The ct. will not admit a minor as an attorney except in very urgent circumstances.—Ex p. STEELE (1864), 33 L. J. Q. B. 326; 10 Jur. N. S. 1254; 12 W. R. 956.

6. Sex — Disqualification of women.]—Before the passing of Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), women were by the common law of England under a general disability, by reason of their sex, to become attorneys or solrs. That disability can be, & is, proved by inveterate usage. It could not be removed by a mere interpretation clause, such as Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 48, which provides that words importing the masculine gender shall extend to a female. There is nothing in Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), or any amending statute which can be construed as giving women any new right to become solrs. The disability therefore continues, & the Law Society cannot admit any woman to their preliminary examination with a view to her becoming a solr.—BEBB v. LAW SOCIETY, [1914] 1 Ch. 286; 83 L. J. Ch. 363; 110 L. T. 353; 30 T. L. R. 179; 58 Sol. Jc. 153, C. A.

———.]—See, now, Sex Disqualification (Removal) Act, 1919 (c. 71).

The order provided that the agreement of service should be destroyed & that certain affidavits should be taken off the file, but contained no direction as to the destruction of copies of the affidavits or of photographs of the alleged forgery which had been taken by the parties. In 1918 present pltf. applied to the Law Society for admission as a solr., & the firm lodged an objection against his admission & exhibited a photograph of the alleged forgery & copies of the affidavits that had been taken off the file. A. In General.

See, now, Stamp Act, 1891 (c. 39), s. 27, sched. I.

39. Necessity for stamping—Before enrolment.]

—It is the duty of the master to refuse to enrol articles of clerkship to an attorney, unless they are stamped at the time they are produced to him; for to allow the enrolment, which is the act of the ct. by means of its officer, would be to admit unstamped articles to be good, useful, & available in a ct. of law, contrary to the prohibition of 9 Will. 3, c. 25, s. 59.—*Ex p. Date of commencement of service—Delay without default of clerk.]—Where articles of clerkship have not been stamped within six months from their execution, but have been subsequently stamped under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 81, & the clerk has served under them from their execution, the ct. will allow a subsequent enrolment of them, to count from the date of the execution, provided there has been no negligence or default on the part of the clerk.—*Ex p. 42. ———.]—A clerk was articulated in 1842 to his father, who died in 1845. Three months after the death it was discovered that the articles had never been stamped. The omission could not be accounted for; but it was not occasioned by any default on the part of the clerk, who, till the discovery referred to was made, believed them to have been stamped. In 1858 they were stamped under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 81, s. 3:—Held: the service of the clerk was to be allowed to be computed from the date of the execution of the articles.—*Ex p. paid, under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 81, s. 3, the ct. will allow the service under them to be computed from the date of their execution, instead of from the date of the filing of the affidavit under Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), ss. 8, 9, provided it is shown to their satisfaction that the non-payment of the duty at the proper time arose from unforeseen emergency, & not from intentional neglect or design.—*Ex p. 45. ——— Master failing to fulfil promise to pay duty.—Appct. had been for several years managing clerk to an attorney, who died, leaving a widow & son, whose service under articles to his father had not then expired. The business was carried on by C., an attorney, for the benefit of the widow & family; & appct. entered into the service of C. to assist him in managing the business for their benefit until the son should be admitted an attorney. In June, 1858, appct. was articulated to the son, who had been admitted in the same year; & the widow promised to pay the stamp duty as an acknowledgment & recompense for his services. He entered into the articles upon this understanding, & did not discover that the duty had not been paid until after the time allowed by law for stamping & enrolling the articles had expired. In Jan. 1862, he petitioned the Lords of the Treasury, who directed the Comrs. of Inland Revenue to stamp the articles, on payment of the duty & penalty under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 81, s. 3, & the articles were stamped accordingly. The ct. refused to allow the service under the articles to be computed from the date of their execution.—Ex p. BREDEN (1862), 2 B. & S. 649; 31 L. J. Q. B. 184; 8 Jur. N. S. 937; 121 E. 46. ——— ——The ct. will permit the service under unstamped articles of clerkship to be reckoned from their date, where the omission to pay the duty at the proper time was the result of an emergency which may be justly inferred to have been unforeseen by the party, the stamp having been since affixed under the authority of the Commissioners of the Treasury. B. had been managing clerk to an attorney who died, leaving a widow & a son too young to carry on the business. He gave his services to the family & to a friend of the family, an attorney, in order to keep the business together until the son should be admitted. The son, as soon as he was admitted, in June, 1858, gave him his articles, & the widow promised to pay the stamp duty, as a reward for the great service he had rendered the family. Trusting to the widow's promise, he continued to serve under the articles; & he did not discover that the money had not been paid until after the expiration of the six months allowed by Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 8, for filing the affidavit & enrolling the articles. In Jan. 1862, he petitioned the Lords of the Treasury, having then procured the money himself, who allowed the articles to be stamped on payment of the duty & the penalty under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 81, s. 3 :—The ct., under the circumstances, & after conferring with the Ct. of Q. 47. ——— Delay intentional.—Although where, from accidental causes or unintentional neglect, articles of clerkship have not been stamped & registered within the six months, the ct. will permit the service of the clerk to be computed from the date of the articles; yet if it appear that the articles were left unstamped intentionally, even though with an improper motive, & so are not registered within six months, the ct. will not interfere on behalf of the clerk.

A. B., who was articulated to his father, was at that time in delicate health, & it being doubtful if he would be able to follow the profession, the articles were left unstamped for a year, when it appearing that the clerk would be able to pursue his profession an application was made to the Treasury for leave to have the articles stamped, which being granted, an application was then made to this ct. that the period of the clerk's service may be computed from the date of the articles, which application was refused.—Re WELCH (1857), 27 L. The father having failed in so doing, B. continued to serve under the articles, knowing them to be unstamped, & after taking counsel's opinion on the subject. At the close of his service, the clerk, for the first time, was enabled to raise sufficient money for the duty & penalty & upon application to the Lords of the Treasury, they granted permission, under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 81, s. 3, for the articles to be stamped, upon payment of the duty & penalty, which was done. On application to the ct. to permit the articles to be enrolled, & service under them to be computed from the date of their execution, the ct. granted partial relief, & allowed two years of the service to count.—*Ex p. —Appct. had been articulated as clerk to his father & served the five years required by law without appct.'s knowledge, as he alleged, that the articles were not stamped. The affidavit of the father stated that, having before the articles been subject to much pecuniary loss & pressing expenses, & a diminution of professional income on account of the changes in the law & personal & family affliction, he was at the time of the articles without the means to pay the stamp duty thereon; & that he had not articulated appct. speculatively, but with the intention of ultimately stamping & enrolling the articles. The Lords of the Treasury having, under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 81, s. 3, directed the Comrs. of Inland Revenue to stamp the articles upon payment of the duty & penalty, & the articles having been stamped accordingly :—Held : they might be enrolled, & the service under them be computed from the date

52. —.]—A person was duly articled to an attorney, who before the period of service expired became bkpt., & finally was struck off the rolls. Before the articles were cancelled, the clerk entered into an agreement in writing with another attorney to procure an assignment of the articles, & in the meantime to serve as his clerk. The former attorney refused to execute an assignment of the original articles. The new articles were not stamped during the service, in consequence, as the clerk deposed on oath, of his poverty, but by permission of the Comrs. of the Treasury, under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 81, s. 1, they were afterwards stamped on payment of the penalty. The ct., under the circumstances, allowed the new articles to be enrolled, & the service under them to count from the date of the clerk's discharge from the original articles.—Ex p. WILSON (1864), 4 B. & S. 889; 3 New Rep. 416; 33 L. 53. —.]— Upon the mistaken legal advice that articles of clerkship need not be stamped for six months after execution, appct.'s articles were executed without stamp; & before the first six months elapsed appct.'s father became unable, in consequence of unexpected losses in business, to pay the amount required. The service, however, was continued under the articles, & three years afterwards the father paid the stamp & penalty:—Held: upon application to compute the service from the date of the articles under Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), ss. 8, 9, although an articled clerk who has been tricked or misled should have every consideration, the ct. will not accept as an excuse for the ordinary requirements of the law upon admission to the profession of an attorney circumstances which are loosely called an emergency, & which do not show a bond fide intention from the commencement to carry out the duties imposed; & the circumstances of this case did not constitute a sufficient excuse.—Ex p. ROTH (1874), 29 L. T. 885; 22 W. R. 329.

54. — Delay prolonged through suspension of articles.]—In 1821, P. was articled to his father, an attorney, & served three years & three months, when his father died; at his death P. finding the articles had never been stamped, placed himself at once in a special pleader's chambers & was called to the bar; subsequently, however, P. became managing clerk to a solr. & continued so till 1860.

On an application to this ct. under the provisions of Solicitors (Clerks) Act, 1844 (c. 86), s. 2, to have the articles enrolled nunc pro tunc, so as to enable P. to serve the remaining time under the articles of 1821, the ct. refused to grant the application.—Ex p. PARKER (1860), 8 W. R. 460.

55. — Delay through accidental omission.]—Where the delay in stamping articles had been caused by some accidental omission, & by the closing of the office on a Holy Day, & the commissioners had allowed the stamping on payment of a penalty, the ct. allowed the time to run from the day of execution.—Re APPLETON'S ARTICLES (1862), 11 W. R. 35.

56. — Delay through mistake of law.]—An attorney's articled clerk applied to stamp his articles within six months of their execution, being misled by the words of 33 & 34 Vict. c. 97, s. 43; but the Inland Revenue refused to affix the stamp except upon payment of a penalty. The clerk subsequently paid the penalty together with the duty, but in consequence of his mistake in the law, he was prevented from enrolling his articles within the time required.

The ct. allowed his service to be reckoned from the date of the articles instead of from the day of filing the affidavit required with the enrolment, under Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), ss. 8, 9.—Ex p. HAYWARD (1873), 29 L. T. 422.

The father subsequently became unable to fulfil his promise, & the son continued to serve under the articles, knowing them to be unstamped, until his service under them had expired. Afterwards he obtained permission from the Lords of the Treasury, under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 81, s. 3, that the articles should be stamped upon payment of the duty & £50 penalty, which was done. On application being made to the ct. to permit the articles to be enrolled, & service under them to be computed from the date of their execution, the ct. refused to grant the application.—Ex p. — (AN ARTICLED CLERK) (1863), 1 New Rep. 321.

59. —.]—A clerk was articled on being told by a friend that he thought the money for the stamp could be raised in a month or six weeks. He was not able to obtain the money for more than a year, when he memorialised the Treasury, & was allowed to have the articles stamped on the payment of a penalty of £20.

The ct. declined to allow his service to date from the execution of the articles.—Ex p. EDWARDS (1863), 2 New Rep. 122; 32 L. J. C. P. 213; 8 L. T. 360; 10 Jur. N. S. 17; 11 W. R. 754.

60. —.]—The ct. will not allow articles of clerkship to be enrolled nunc pro tunc, & the service under them to be reckoned as from their date, where there has been an omission to cause them to be stamped within the time required by law, even though the Treasury has accepted the stamp duty, with a penalty, unless it is shown that the omission has been the result of some unforeseen emergency, or of the failure of some just expectation. The mere disappointment of a vague hope, will not suffice.—Ex p. JONES (1863), 14 C. B. N. S. 301; 143 E. R. 461.

61. —.]—The ct. will only permit articles of clerkship to be enrolled nunc pro tunc, & the service thereunder to be computed from the date of their execution, the duty & penalty under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 81, s. 3, being paid, where the omission to stamp them at the proper time has been the result of some accident or unforeseen circumstance. The mere disappointment of some vague hope or expectation of obtaining the means of paying the duty in time will not be received as an excuse for a non-compliance with the statute.—Ex p. DARVILLE (1867), L. 63. —.]—The ct. will allow the service under articles of clerkship to be computed from their date, notwithstanding the stamp duty thereon has not been paid within the proper period, provided the failure to pay it has arisen from some unforeseen circumstance over which the party had no control. Therefore, where the failure had arisen from the non-payment of a debt due to the clerk, which he had a reasonable expectation to obtain in time, the excuse was held sufficient.—Re SAYER (1875), L. Before granting an application that the service of a clerk to an attorney under unstamped articles may be computed from the date thereof, & not from the time of enrolment, the ct. will require that notice of the application shall be given to the Incorporated Law Society, in order that an opportunity may be afforded of investigating the truth of the statements upon which the application is founded.—*Ex p. PART II. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 5.

70 i. Completion of period.—The time of a clerk articled after July 1, 1858, must expire fourteen days before the term of his admission, for the affidavit of service cannot be accepted at a later period. Where, therefore, M. was articled for a year on Jan. 25, 1860, & Hilary term began on Feb. 4, of articles.—The service of an articled clerk is reckoned as from the date of the execution, & not from the day of the date of the articles; consequently, he cannot be admitted till he has served five years from the day of the execution.—Ex p. ANGEL (1840), 4 Jur. 656.

1861:—Held: he could not be admitted in that term.—Re MACGACHEN (1861), 20 U. C. R. 32.—CAN.

69. — Form of application for commencement—Irregularity in application.—Where an application for service to be reckoned from the date of articles is granted, & it subsequently appears that such application was not made upon affidavit, the rule cannot be drawn up; but the ct. in such a case granted a second application.—*Ex p. 70. Completion of period.—Where B., an articled clerk & M.A., was articled on May 8, 1858, for three years "from the date thereof":—Held: such service was not completed until after May 8, 1861.—Re —, M.A. (1861), 9 W. R. 639.

72. Reduction of period—On passing specified examination.—In order to enable a graduate of the Universities, named in Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 7, to be admitted an attorney after three years' service, he must have taken his degree before being bound by articles. It is not sufficient that, within the four years preceding such binding, he should have completed the time necessary to enable him to take his degree, but has been prevented by illness from doing so, & has in fact taken his degree within a few months after the binding.—Ex p. BRADFORD (1859), 1 E. & E. 417; 28 L. J. Q. B. 138; 32 L. T. O. S. 254; 5 Jur. N. S. 648; 7 W. R. 188; 120 E. R. 966; subsequent proceedings, 1 L. T. 61.

73. —.]—Under Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 7, to enable a clerk to be admitted after three years' service only, he must have taken his degree before he was bound a clerk; where, therefore, a clerk was bound by articles in Dec. 1855, & he took his degree in Oct. 1856, & served three years after so taking his degree, & passed a successful examination, the ct. refused a fiat for his admission as an attorney.—Ex p. BRADFORD (1859), 1 L. T. 61.

74. —.]—By Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 3, no person is to be capable of being admitted an attorney unless he shall have been bound by contract, in writing, to serve as clerk for & during the term of five years; & by sect. 5 of Solicitors Act, 1860 (c. 127), certain of the judges may by regulations, direct that the person having successfully passed any examination, now or hereafter to be established in any of the universities, & to be specified in such regulations, may be admitted after having been subsequently bound & served under articles for four years.

The ct. directed that he should be examined with a view to his admission as an attorney under Solicitors Act, 1860 (c. 127), s. 4, notwithstanding the interval between the termination of the first service & the date of the articles.—*Ex p. On Mar. 2, 1864, having then served for nine years, S. entered into articles of clerkship with W. for five years, being unaware of the provisions of Solicitors Act, 1860 (c. 127), s. 4, which enable a person to be admitted an attorney, etc., who shall for the term of ten years have been a bonâ fide clerk to an attorney, etc., & during that term shall have been bonâ fide engaged in the transaction & performance, under the direction & superintendence of the attorney, etc., of such matters of business as are usually transacted and performed by attorneys, etc., & who, after the expiration of the term of ten years, shall have been bound by, & has duly served under, articles of clerkship to a practising attorney, etc., for the term of three years. In Hilary Term, 1868, S. applied to the ct. under Solicitors Act, 1860 (c. 127), s. 12, to be at liberty to pass his examination, in order to be admitted an attorney at the termination of the fourth year of his service under the articles in the ensuing Mar., on the ground that he was entitled to the benefit of sect. 4. The ct. granted the application, holding that appct. was within the meaning of sect. 4 though his articles had been executed before the expiration of the ten years' service; & that the requirements as to the ten years' service were satisfied by his having been employed as a clerk from the commencement of the service in the transactions of the business of the attorney's office.—Re SHERRY (1868), L. The examiners decided that service at such age was not bonâ fide & active employment in the business of a solr.'s office, & refused to admit him to the examination. He returned to England in June, 1872, & at once resumed his service till July, 1873, when his term expired. He passed his final examination in Trinity Term, 1873, & applied for leave to be admitted in Michaelmas Term, 1873:—Held: the eleven months, during which the clerk had been absent, could not be counted as service; as he had not been "actually employed" as an attorney or solicitor during the whole of the five years, as required by Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 12.—Ex p. MOSES (1873), L. 96. Whether counted—Period of service pending assignment of articles.]—Where a clerk had served part of his time with a master who had left the country, & before his articles were assigned to another master, an interval of ten months had elapsed, during which he was not serving under any articles, but under the assignment he served the remainder of the time specified; the ct. would not allow him to be admitted until he had served out the ten months under new articles.—Ex p. ROWLE (1820), 2 Chit. 61.

97. ———.]—A clerk, duly articulated to an attorney, served a portion of his time with his master. It was then agreed that the clerk should be assigned to his father, also an attorney, for the residue of his term. On this understanding, the clerk immediately left his first master with his consent, & served his father as a clerk for the residue of the five years. A dispute having arisen between the first master & the father respecting the amount of premium to be repaid, which was not settled for some months, the assignment of the clerk was not executed until about six months after he had actually commenced to serve his father:—Held: the service of the father during the interval before the execution of the assignment, could not be considered as a service with the father under the articles; but as it was by the consent of the original master & for his purposes, it might, under the circumstances, be considered a service with that master.—*Ex p. On this understanding the clerk left his first master & went into the service of the second master. From circumstances over which the clerk had no control, the assignment to the second master was not executed for about eight weeks after his entering the second master's service. The clerk served under the assignment for the residue of the term:—Held: the interval between entering the second master's service & the execution of the assignment could not be reckoned as service under the articles within Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 12.—*Ex p. 103. ———.]—W. was articulated for five years to his father, who was an attorney. After part of the time of service had elapsed the father died, & the articles were shortly afterwards assigned to C., who was also an attorney. In the interval between the death of the father & the assignment of the articles W. attended regularly at the office, & was employed in the business there. The ct. refused to allow that interval to be reckoned as part of the five years.—Ex p. WALLIS (1862), 2 B. & S. 416; 31 L. J. Q. B. 176; 6 L. T. 242; 8 Jur. N. S. 913; 10 W. R. 524; 121 E. 104. ——— On insanity of original master.]—When a clerk is discharged from his articles, on the ground of his master's insanity, he must be articulated to another attorney for the residue of the term of five years unelapsed at the time of the insanity commencing, & a portion of the time served after that event with other attorneys carrying on the master's business cannot be reckoned.—*Ex p. with the consent of his father in the name of another attorney, who was not a partner with his master, & almost unknown to him. 112. — Service with master's partner.—After conviction of master for felony.]—The master of an articulated clerk committed felony, of which he was convicted, a point of law being reserved, which was afterwards decided against him. Pending these proceedings, the clerk continued in the office serving his master's partner. Upon an application after the decision of the Ct. of Criminal Appeal, by the clerk, that he might be permitted to enter into fresh articles with his master's partner without an assignment, & that his service under them might be reckoned from the time when his service with his former master, by reason of his felony, terminated:—Held: the ct. had no power to grant the last branch of the application.

S. has not been serving his master during the period he seeks to have the advantage of, but he has been serving his partner; & it is not possible, therefore, to say that during this period he has been serving under his articles. This is certainly a misfortune for him, but the ct. cannot interfere (PATTESON, J.).—Ex p. STRATTON (1849), 14 L. T. O. S. 207.

due, being employed as a surveyor of taxes in the Inland Revenue Office. He then returned to his original master, & served him as clerk, but not under articles, for a period of five months & six days:—Held: the latter period of service, as clerk, could not be computed with the former period of such service, so as to make the requisite period of five years' service. But leave was granted to S. to enter into fresh articles, to be stamped with the same duty as was payable on the original articles, & to serve under such fresh articles to complete the period of five years.—Ex p. SMITH (1859), 1 E. & E. 928; 28 L. The business, most of which was introduced through J.'s connection, was managed by him on this footing, he receiving & paying all moneys, & his name appearing outside the office door. On the completion of his term of service, J., applied to be admitted to the final examination, but the examiners considered that the provisions as to service in Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), had not been complied with :—Held : on the evidence in the case, there had been actual service during the term of the articles within the Act, & J. should be admitted to the examination.—Ex p. JOYCE (1877), 4 Ch. 133. — What extent of supervision necessary.]—Although in order to constitute good service of an articled clerk under Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 12, supervision & control of the master during the time of service is requisite, this must be understood in a relative, not an absolute sense. A clerk having been a managing clerk for several years previous to entering into articles, & also being a person of mature age, renders the control & supervision of his master less necessary than in the case of a young man just entering on the profession.—Ex p. DUNCAN (1864), 5 B. & S. 341; 10 L. 134. — Illness of master—Business practically suspended.]—A clerk was articled to his father in Apr. 1872, for the term of five years, & attended the office regularly for that time, but from Michaelmas, 1875, to Michaelmas, 1876, his father was absent from ill health, & business was practically suspended, although the office remained open :—Held : the clerk might be allowed to go in for his final examination in Apr. 1877, but must enter into fresh articles for a year & serve under them before he could be admitted.—Ex p. FEREDAY (1877), 46 L. 135. Service with barrister—Clerk articled for three years.]—An articled clerk, who had taken an A.B. degree & had been articled for three years to an attorney under Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 7, served two years with the attorney, & eight months with his London agent, after which he went to a special pleader for four months, & was then examined & passed. The examiners having refused to issue their certificate, on the ground that the clerk had not served the attorney or agent for three years, as required by the Act, the ct. gave him liberty to enter into further articles for four months, to complete the three years' service, & authorised the examiners, at the expiration of the time, to issue their certificate without further examination.—Ex p. EARLE (1853), 17 Jur. 440; Bail. 136. — Subsequent service under assignment of articles.]—A. was articled to his father, an attorney, but on being so, at once became the pupil of a conveyancer, & at the expiration of a year spent in the chambers of the latter, the articles were assigned to other attorneys, whom he served during the remaining four years. The Incorporated Law Society objected to admit him as an attorney, on the ground that he had not actually served his father under the articles for any space of time whatever. On motion to compel the society to admit him :—Held : the year spent in the conveyancer's chambers was, by Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 6, made equivalent to a year's service under the articles, & as A. had duly served the attorneys to whom the articles were assigned for the rest of the time prescribed by the Act, he was entitled to admission.—Re ARTICLED CLERK (1871), 25 L. 200. Bill of exchange accepted on consideration of business done by solicitor—No stamp duty paid on admission of solicitor—Whether indorsee of bill has good title.]—In an action against the acceptor of a bill of exchange indorsed to pltf. after it became due, deft. pleaded that the consideration for the bill was business done for him by one W., as his attorney & solr., & alleged that W. in 1810 was admitted an attorney of the K. B. & a solr. in Ch., but took out no certificate till 1813; that from that time he practised & renewed his certificate until 1819, when he took out no certificate for one year & upwards; that he was readmitted in the K. B. in 1823, but neglected for more than a year to obtain a certificate; & that at the time the business in question was done, he had not been readmitted in any of the cts. of law, except as aforesaid. The replication stated, that in 1826 W. was admitted an attorney of the Common Pleas, & was readmitted in Ch., & regularly took out his certificate for that & the four following years, & that the business, for which the bill of exchange was given, was transacted during those five years. The rejoinder alleged, that the admission in the Common Pleas was by virtue of a contract enrolled in the K. B., & under which W. had been admitted in that ct. in 1810, & readmitted in 1823; & that he "was so admitted in the said Ct. of Common Pleas, without payment of any further duty in that behalf, according to the form of the statute in that behalf"—Held: the admission in this ct. must be considered as an original admission, & the non-payment of the stamp duty at the time did not render the admission void, although it may have subjected the party to penalties, & consequently, he might maintain an action for his fees, & might, at any time, give a good title to an indorsee of a bill accepted upon that consideration.—*MIDDLETON v. Where a solicitor applied for & paid for a certificate for the period between Oct. 1847, & Nov. 1848, & the officer by mistake dated it Oct. 1848, & Nov. 1849:—Held: the solr. was not entitled to recover for business done in 1849.—*BRUNSWICK (DUKE) v. 211. — Money advanced by client.]—Costs incurred by an uncertified attorney are not to be allowed by the master on taxation, unless it appear clearly that the client has actually advanced money to the attorney in the course of the cause, in which case the amount so advanced should be allowed in the taxation between party & party.

But where, after the objection had been taken & the taxation postponed on that account, the attorney procured from his client, pltf. who was an extremely poor man, his acceptance for £150 & stated that he had indorsed it over to a bond fide holder, but the name of the indorsee was not given:—Held: that was not an advance of money by the client as entitled him to have his costs allowed against debt.

225. — Whether client can recover—Sum deposited by client—Direction to pay out of sum costs to be incurred.—Solicitors Act, 1874 (c. 68), s. 12, provides that "No costs, fee, reward, or disbursement on account of or in relation to any act or proceeding done or taken by any person who acts as an attorney or solr., without being duly qualified so to act shall be recoverable in any action, suit, or matter by any person or persons whomsoever."

A solr., during a time when he was not duly qualified, because he had not taken out a certificate, acted for a client in certain bkpcy. proceedings, & in anticipation that it would be necessary to deposit £125 in the Bkpcy. Ct. as a result of those proceedings, the client deposited that sum in his solr.'s hands to be used for that purpose. It subsequently became unnecessary to make a deposit in the Bkpcy. Ct., & the client directed the solr. to retain the money for his costs. The solr. did not deliver a bill of costs to his client, & claimed the right to retain the money in his hands to meet his costs & disbursements on behalf of his client;—Held: the direction of the client was a direction to make payments proper to be made by the solr. as a solr., therefore both parties must have contemplated that a taxation would be necessary, & Solicitors Act, 1874 (c. 68), s. 12, applied, & that the client was entitled to have repaid to him by the solr. such of the amounts as might be disallowed on taxation.—BROWNE v. BARBER, [1913] 2 K. B. 553; 82 L. J. K. B. 1006; 108 L. T. 774, C. A.

SEXTON* (1832), 1 Dowl. 180.

227. Whether costs allowed on taxation.—An attorney's bill of costs having been referred to taxation, certain items were objected to before the master, on the ground that the attorney at the time those items were incurred was uncertificated, & the master accordingly disallowed them:—Held: the master acted rightly in disallowing.—Re ANGELL (1848), 6 Dow. & L. 144; 3 New Pract. 231. — Fees in respect of briefs & refreshers—Effect of Solicitors Act, 1874 (c. 68), s. 12.]

A solr., during a time when he was not duly qualified, because he had not taken out a certificate, delivered briefs to counsel, & the trial took place during that period, & refreshers became payable. After he had taken out his certificate he paid fees in respect of those briefs & refreshers. He sued his client to recover the amount due upon his bill of costs, which included those fees, & judgment was given for the amount appearing to be due upon the bill, the bill to be taxed:—Held: these fees were "disbursements on account of or in relation to an act or proceeding done or taken," while the solr. was not duly qualified, & they ought to have been struck out of the bill on taxation.—KENT v. WARD (1894), 70 L. T. 612; 38 Sol. Jo. 401; 9 R. 593, C. A.

CHAMBERS* (1838), 2 Keen, 497; 48 E. R. 719; sub nom. DUFFIELD v. ELWES, Re WILTON, Ex p. CHAMBERS, 9 L. J. Ch. 200; 2 Jur. 489.

233. Before master—Useless facts subsequently ascertained.—(1) An objection that an attorney is not duly certificated should be taken before the master. If made the subject of an application to the ct., it should at least be shown clearly that the party could not by the exercise of reasonable diligence have ascertained the fact in time to bring it to the master's attention.

(2) If money has been paid by a party to an action to an unqualified attorney, he cannot recover it back, & to this extent he may recover his costs

PART II. SECT. 6, SUB-SECT. 4.—D.

227 i. Whether costs allowed on taxation.—A solr., employed by a client on special agreements, did some of the work during periods when his licence duty remained unpaid. On an application by the client for delivery of a bill of costs & taxation, the taxing master was directed inter alia to certify whether the agreements were fair & reasonable. The master reported that they were so &, after taxing the costs, certified that he had allowed all costs & expenses incurred during the periods when the licence duty was unpaid:—Held: under Solicitors (Ireland) Act, 1898, s. 48, the items relating to business done during these periods should not be allowed.—*MARTIN v. firm purporting to be a firm of solrs., one of the members, however, not being a duly admitted or certificated solr. 338. 339. —.] — A person under examination before justices of the peace, on a charge of felony, has no right to have a legal adviser attending on his behalf, still less to cross examine the witness for the prosecution, & to examine opposing testimony to prove his innocence. The privilege when allowed, is entirely a matter of discretion in the justices.

Where an attorney of this ct. was retained by a prisoner, charged with felony, & to attend & give him his advice & assistance during his examination before justices, & after notice to the latter that he attended upon such retainer for that purpose:—Held: the justices might forcibly turn him out of the justice room, & exclude his presence during the investigation of the case. Qu.: whether this rule applies where the decision of the justices is final, as on convictions under penal statutes no appeal being given.—*COX v. But, in general, the ct. in which magistrates are sitting judicially is an open ct., to which the public have a right of access; & supposing there to be room, that a person conducts himself properly, & there be no reason to justify an order for his removal, every one of the public has a right to be present.

Accordingly, where magistrates sitting judicially ordered an attorney, who attended on behalf of the accused, to be turned out of the room:—Held: independent of any question as to his right as an attorney, he was entitled to maintain an action of trespass for being thus turned out, on the ground of right, as one of the public, to be present. *DAUBNEY v. SUB-SECT. 2.—WHAT AMOUNTS TO.

385. General rule.]—(1) An injunction, which had been granted to restrain an action at law, to recover the arrears of an annuity granted to the wife of a person, who, from the nature of his connection with the grantor, was held to have abused his confidence by unduly exercising the influence which he possessed, ordered on the hearing to be continued.

(2) In cases of parent & child, guardian & ward, trustee & cestui que trust, etc., cts. of equity, although in general they will not disturb the enjoyment of benefits conferred by acts purely voluntary, will regard the gifts of the latter, made without consideration, with much jealousy; but where the parties stand in the relation of attorney & client, so immediately is the former under the eye of the cts., & so anxiously do they watch the interests of the latter, that although the voluntary gift of the client may be supported, it is so indispensably necessary to show it to be bonâ fide, & free from the imputation of any of the above objections, as to render it in some sort essential to its validity & stability, that some other professional man than the donee should have the conduct of it, or at least that some indifferent third person should be privy to the whole transaction. The ct. having ordered an injunction, obtained on the grounds on which the present was granted, to be continued, refused to impose the terms of paying the money into ct. if the parties are attorney & client.

(3) To constitute the connection of attorney & client, it is sufficient that the party has no other solr., to whom he is in the habit of resorting for advice; & it is not necessary that the attorney should be shown to be in any particular manner, or to any extent, employed in law business for him.—GODDARD v. CARLISLE (1821), 9 Price, 169; 147 E. R. 57.

386. Implication from acts of parties—Retainer of clerk to attorney—Application at office where clerk employed.]—A., an attorney, was employed by B., another attorney, as his clerk, & it was agreed between them that A. should have the benefit of the common law business. C. applied at the office of B., & common law & other business was done for him there. In an action brought by A. against C. for the common law business:—Held: there was evidence to go to the jury of a retainer of A. by C.—PINLEY v. BAGNALL (1782), 3 Doug. K. B. 155; 99 E. R. 588.

387. — Receiving payment out of court.]—Receiving out of ct. the money produced by a suit is equivalent to evidence of a special retainer, & the solr. will be entitled to recover the amount of his bill of costs.—GRAY v. WAINMAN (1823), 7 Moore, C. P. 467; 1 L. J. O. S. C. P. 21.

389. — Failure to repudiate—Action defended on authority of third party.]—An attorney being employed for a man by his father, to defend an action; if he knew of his retainer, & did not disapprove of it, he is bound by the acts of such attorney, in the same way as if he had himself employed him.—CAMERON v. BAKER (1824), 1 C. & P. 268; 171 E. R. 1190, N. P.

390. — — Action commenced without authority.]—The fact that a party, knowing that his name has, without authority, been introduced as pltf. by the solr. of some of the other pltf. in a suit, does not take any active steps to have his name expunged as pltf. from the record is not, as between that party & the solr., equivalent to a retainer or an adoption of the latter as his solr.—HALL v. 391. — — —.]—(1) Where an attorney brings an action without the authority of pltf., pltf. is entitled to have the proceedings stayed without payment of costs.

(2) If pltf. after action brought in his name by an attorney without authority hears of it, & does not repudiate it, he will be supposed to have ratified the attorney's act (BLACKBURN, J.).—REYNOLDS v. HOWELL (1873), L. R. 8 Q. B. 398; 42 L. J. Q. B. 181; 29 L. T. 209; 22 W. R. 18.

392. Retainer to commence suit subsequently abated—Whether amounting to retainer to commence second action against same parties.]—A retainer to commence a suit, which suit is afterwards abated by plea for non-joinder, is sufficient evidence of a retainer to commence another action against the parties named in the plea in abatement.—CROOK v. WRIGHT (1825), Ry. & M. 278; 171 E. R. 1020.

393. — Attorney appearing for prisoner on capias ad respondendum.]—Appearing as an attorney before a judge for a prisoner in custody on a capias ad respondendum does not constitute him attorney in the suit, so as to entitle pltf. to leave the declaration at his office.—SPENCER v. NEWTON (1837), 6 Ad. & El. 630; 1 Nev. & P. K. B. 823; Will. Woll. & Dav. 232; 6 L. J. K. B. 148; 112 E. R. 242.

394. — Leaving papers with solicitor.]—In an action on an attorney's bill for defending a tithe suit, the retainer in which is disputed by deft., it is enough to show, that deft. called at pltf.'s office, & left his writ & notice of declaration & that he afterwards expressed his determination to go to the bottom of it." It is no defence to the action to show, that long before the date of that action, in the course of which the business was done, deft., with others in the parish of P., entered into articles of agreement, binding themselves to contribute towards the defence of whatever suits might be brought for the recovery of tithes against the subscribers, that pltf. was present at one of the meetings of a committee appointed to conduct the defences, & that at another, a resolution was passed to pay him £200 towards the expenses of defending some of the tithe suits; but deft. is liable to the attorney, unless he can show that he expressly assented to look to the general fund, & not to him for his bill.—PARROTT v. ECHELLS (1839), 3 J. P. 771.

395. — Payment into court by one defendant — Whether amounting to retainer by co-defendant.]—In an action on an attorney's bill against two defts., a plea of payment of money into ct. does not admit a retainer by both defts., so as to charge them for anything beyond the amount paid in, although there may be some evidence, as against one of defts., to a further amount.—ARCHER v. ENGLISH (1840), 1 Man. & G. 873; Drinkwater, 30; 2 Scott, N. R. 156; 10 L. J. C. P. 15; 4 Jur. 1186; 133 E. R. 585.

396. — Payment into court of part of claim.]—Pltf. was partner, as an attorney & solr., with J., town clerk to defts., the corpn. of B. Defts. made an order that the town clerk should defend & prosecute an alleged right of the corpn. At this time, by an accidental omission, J. was off the rolls of the ct., & unable to practise: but this fact was not known to defts. until after the work was done. Certain parties having been charged at the Sessions for the borough, which was a county in itself, with a misdemeanour, arising out of the assertion of this right, pltf. conducted their defence, & removed the bills of certiorari, & continued to conduct it until judgment was passed. It was not found in the case in which these facts were stated that the town clerk was also clerk of the peace. In an action by pltf. against defts. for work done as attorney & solr. on their retainer:—Held: from these facts no retainer of pltf. could be implied, although part of the amount charged had been paid by defts. into ct.—STEAVENSON v. BERWICK-UPON-TWEED CORPN. (1841), 1 Q. B. 154; Arn. & H. 265; 4 Per. & Dav. 546; 10 L. J. Q. B. 95; 5 J. P. 386; 113 E. R. 1089.

397. — Consent to consolidation order.]—Where a judge's order is made by consent to consolidate actions against several defts. who have severally employed the same attorney, upon their undertaking to be bound by the event of the trial of one, the order to consolidate operates as a joint retainer by defts. of the attorney, & they are jointly liable to him for the costs of the action which is tried.—ANDERSON v. BOYNTON (1849), 13 Q. B. 308; 7 Dow. & L. 25; 19 L. J. Q. B. 42; 12 L. T. O. S. 421; 14 Jur. 14; 116 E. R. 1281.

398. — Authorising attorney to conduct suit — Although not party to suit.]—A person not party to a suit, but who has desired an attorney to conduct it, may be liable to him for his costs, if by his words & acts he has given him grounds for regarding him as his employer, even although he has no legal or equitable interest in the subject-matter of the suit, & pltf. in the action is referred to for instructions.—SOUTHALL v. KEDDY (1858), 1 F. & F. 177.

400. — Investment of funds by solicitor trustee.]—Funds, subject to the trusts of a settlement, were invested in Exchequer bills, on the sale of which the proceeds were paid to the account of a firm of solrs. F., S., & F., at their bankers. The funds were afterwards advanced on a mtge. of house property in a new neighbourhood, & of inadequate value. At that date there were no trustees of the settlement, & the mtge. was taken in the names of S., & two other persons who were then proposed, & shortly afterwards appointed new trustees, & never repudiated the transaction. S. was the member of his firm who acted for them in all the matters, & for the work which he did the firm, by arrangement, received, at the time when the money was advanced, payment for their bill of costs out of the funds. The mtge. proved to be an insufficient security, & in an action against the trustees it was held that they were jointly & severally liable to make good the loss sustained. The property not having been sold, or the trust funds replaced, beneficiaries sought to make the firm of solrs. liable for the loss of the funds on the ground of negligence, though S.'s partners had not had any personal knowledge of the property at the time when the mtge. transaction was completed:—Held: though there had not been an express retainer, the relation of solr. & client might be inferred from the acts of the parties; it subsisted between the firm & the trustees, & the firm were liable in damages for the negligence of S. for failure in discharge of the duty which had been undertaken to the clients.—BLYTH v. FLADGATE, MORGAN v. BLYTH, SMITH v. BLYTH, [1891] 1 Ch. 337; 60 L. J. Ch. 66; 63 L. T. 546; 39 W. R. 422; 7 T. L. R. 29.

401. — Delegation to second solicitor by solicitor retained — Whether amounting to retainer of second solicitor by client.]—In 1907 pltf. retained S. as their solr. to conduct an action on their behalf. S. without their authority or knowledge arranged with L., another solr., that L. should conduct the action, not as his agent, but as pltf.'s solr., & L. issued the writ & delivered the statement of claim in his firm's name. L. subsequently entered into negotiations with defts.' solr. with a view to a compromise to the action. Before the compromise was completed pltf., for reasons in no way connected with the action, declined to employ S. any longer as their solr. & entrusted the conduct of the action & compromise to another firm of solrs., & thereupon L. ceased to do any active work in the matter. In 1910 the compromise was completed, one of the terms being that pltf. should bear their own costs. In 1912 pltf. discovered that L. had acted in the action. In 1913 L. claimed payment of his costs by pltf.:—Held:

The client, by his bill to set aside the deed, denied the truth of the recitals, & insisted that the settlement was made without his knowledge or authority. The attorney, by his answer, alleged that the recitals were true, & that the deed was made & executed with the knowledge & authority of the client, & in order to prevent him from dissipating his property, but gave no evidence of such knowledge or authority. The ct. held that the burden of proof was upon the attorney, & set aside the deed, with costs to be paid by him.—MOORE v. PRANCE (1851), 9 Hare, 299; 20 L. J. Ch. 468; 18 L. T. O. *Annotation:—*Expld. & Distd. Vansandau v. Browne (1832), 9 Bing. 402.

413. —.]—HARRIS v. OSBOURN, No. 447, post.

414. —.]—The retainer & employment of a solr. in such a matter as a bkpcy., an administration, or a winding-up, does not constitute an entire contract so as to deprive the solr. of his right to payment, except for costs out of pocket, till the whole matter is completed, & successive bills of costs in such a matter are not necessarily to be treated as one bill brought down to the date of the latest delivery. Accordingly, where solrs. had been retained to act for a trustee in bkpcy., & also to protect the interests of S., a creditor, who subsequently by arrangement with the other creditors took over bkpt.'s estate, & they delivered a bill of costs up to a certain date, with an intimation that there were then, & would still be, some further items, & delivered a second bill of costs, incurred after the date to which the first bill came down, on an application by S. to tax both bills, more than twelve months after the delivery of the first:—Held: they must be treated as separate bills, & the second bill only could be taxed.

The doctrine of common law that the retainer of a solr. for an action is a retainer of him for the whole of it, & that, therefore, his bill is not due till the end of it, is based on the principle of such retainer being an entire contract, & must not be extended too broadly to suits & proceedings in equity.—Re HALL & BARKER (1878), 9 Ch. D. 538; 47 L. J. Ch. 621; 26 W. R. 501.

415. —.]—The contract of a solr. who accepts a retainer in a common law action is, in the absence of agreement to the contrary, an entire contract to conduct the case of the client until the action is finished. He is not entitled, therefore, without good cause, on giving reasonable notice to his client, to decline to act further in the action for him, & thereupon sue for his costs in respect of the previous conduct of the client's case.—UNDERWOOD, SON & PIPER v. LEWIS, [1894] 2 Q. B. 306; 64 L. J. Q. B. 60; 70 L. T. 833; 42 W. R. 517; 10 T. L. R. 465; 38 Sol. Jo. 479; 9 R. 440, C. A.

416. — Excepting natural breaks — Where business lengthy.]—Where a solr. is retained to conduct litigation, other than an ordinary action at common law, which may extend over a considerable period of time, & in which breaks may occur of such a kind as to be equivalent to the conclusion of a definite & distinct part of the proceedings, he may deliver to his client a bill of costs for business done up to the occurrence of any such breaks in the litigation, & demand payment. Where, however, in the course of the proceedings several bills of costs have been sent in at different times by the solr., it is always a question of fact whether they were sent in as final bills for work done up to the occurrence of any such break in the litigation, so as to be separate bills & therefore not liable to taxation after the lapse of twelve months, or whether they were merely statements of account or portions of one entire bill, so as to make the whole liable to taxation if the last part has been delivered within twelve months of the application to tax.

Prima facie a solr., when he is retained by the client, undertakes to finish his client's business. As to business which is not a common law action, but which may be a suit in equity, lengthy either by reason of the number of the parties or by reason of its comprehending a variety of really independent litigation, there may be natural breaks (BOWEN, L.J.).—Re ROMER & HASLAM, [1893] 2 Q. C. Effect of Lunacy.

438. Insanity of client—Terminates retainer—Although solicitor without notice of insanity.]—Where an authority given to an agent has without his knowledge, been determined by the death or lunacy of the principal, & subsequently, the agent has, in the belief that he was acting in pursuance thereof, made a contract or transacted some business with another person, representing that, in so doing, he was acting on behalf of the principal, the agent is liable, as having impliedly warranted the existence of the authority which he assumed to exercise, to that other person, in respect of damage occasioned to him by reason of the non-existence of that authority.

Solrs. were instructed by a client to conduct his defence to an action which was then threatened & was afterwards commenced against him. Before the commencement of the action the client became, & was certified as being, of unsound mind. In ignorance of his unsoundness of mind, & of his having been so certified, the solrs. entered an appearance for him in the action, & delivered a defence, to which pltf. replied, & other interlocutory proceedings took place in the action. Subsequently, the action not then having come to trial, pltf.'s solr. was informed that deft. had been certified as being of unsound mind; & an application was made on behalf of the pltf. at chambers for an order that the appearance & all subsequent proceedings in the action should be struck out, & that the solrs. who had assumed to act for deft. should be ordered personally to pay pltf.'s costs of the action up to date, on the ground that they had so acted without authority. The master made an order that the appearance & subsequent proceedings in the action should be struck out, but refused to make an order for payment of pltf.'s costs by the solrs. personally, which refusal was on appeal affirmed by the judge at chambers:—Held: the solrs. who had taken on themselves to act for deft. in the action had thereby impliedly warranted that they had authority to do so, & therefore were liable personally to pay pltf.'s costs of the action.—YONGE v. TOYNBEE, [1910] 1 K. B. 215; 79 L. J. K. B. 208; 102 L. T. 57; 26 T. L. R. 211, O. A.

S. C., Ord. 9, r. 6a; & judgment signed in default of appearance. At the time of the service of the writ she was of unsound mind & confined in an asylum, but this was unknown to pltf.:—Held: the judgment must be set aside, as the writ ought to have & had not been served under R. S. C., Ord. 13, r. 1.

As for the objection that the solrs. are not qualified to appear for the lunatic, there is no doubt that they were authorised to act when she was first taken ill, & I think that the retainer would extend to enable them to take such steps as became necessary in consequence of her lunacy (GROVE, J.).—FORE STREET WAREHOUSE CO. v. amounts to reasonable notice.]—An attorney is bound to carry on a suit to its termination, unless he give reasonable notice to his client of his intention to retire from the further conduct of it.

An attorney who had been retained to conduct the defence of an action brought against a party, obtained a verdict for his client; a rule for a new trial was subsequently obtained, but two assizes having passed without any further step being taken by pltf. to proceed to a second trial, the attorney sent in his bill of costs, which deft. promised to pay:—Held: this was reasonable notice to his client of his intention to determine the contract between them & to retire from the further conduct of the suit, & the promise to pay the bill was a concurrence by deft. to the termination of the relation of attorney & client which had subsisted between them.—SMITH v. ROCKE (1845), 5 L. T. O. S. 243.

455. ———.]—Necessity for reasonable notice.]—An attorney who has given notice that he will not go on with a cause in the Ct. of Ch. without being supplied with money, has a right to desist from it, & may recover for the work done up to that time.—ROWSON v. EARLE (1829), Mood. & M. 538, N. P.

456. ———.]—(1) An attorney, who has commenced an action for his client, has a right to refuse to go on without an advance of money on account, provided he gives his client sufficient notice of his intention to enable him to make the required provision.

(2) If an attorney has reasonable & probable grounds for commencing an action, & desists from prosecuting it, because he afterwards discovers that the cause cannot be successfully proceeded with, he is entitled to recover his costs from his client.—LAWRENCE v. POTTS (1834), 11 C. & P. 428; 172 E. R. 1306, N. P.

457. ———.]—As a general rule, an attorney or solr., retained to conduct a suit, is under the obligation to carry it on to its termination, & he cannot sue for his bill of costs until that period has arrived. He may, however, give a reasonable notice to his client to supply him with adequate funds; & in case of refusal, he may sue him for his costs. The retainer is also determined by the death of the client.

A solr. was retained in a Chancery suit in which his client was a deft., & an order was made by the ct. that a supplemental bill should be filed, to make certain persons, next of kin, parties to the suit; no decree was ever made, nor was there any further step taken in the suit. Upwards of ten years after this order had been made, the solr.'s client died:—Held: in an action by the solr. against the representative of the client for his bill of costs up to the time when the order was made, the debt was not barred by Stat. Limitations.—WHITEHEAD v. LORD (1852), 7 Exch. 691; 21 L. J. Ex. 239; 19 L. T. O. S. 113; 155 E. R. 1126.

459. ———.]—What amounts to reasonable notice.]—An attorney may refuse to proceed with a cause, unless he be supplied with funds; but he must give reasonable notice to that effect. Therefore, where on the commission day of the assizes, he said that he should not deliver briefs till pltf. gave him money to fee counsel, that was held not to be sufficiently reasonable notice to entitle him to abandon the case, because he had received no money; although pltf. promised to return & bring the money, but did not, before the cause was called on.—Hoby v. BUILT (1832), 3 B. & Ad. 350; 1 L. J. K. B. 121; 110 E. R. 131.

460. ———.]—LEWIS v. KNOX (1850), 15 L. T. O. S. 141.

461. ———.]—Question of fact for jury.]—Generally, the attorney who commences an action for a client must conduct it to its termination; but he may refuse to proceed with it unless provided with funds.

If he so refuses, he must give his client reasonable notice of his intention to do so. Whether the notice is reasonable is a question for the jury.

An attorney is not responsible for the conduct of the cause at the trial; he cannot control the discretion of counsel.—KINGDON v. WILTON (1852), 18 L. T. O. S. 228.

462. ———.]—Agreement not to require funds.]—(1) Where a solr. agrees with his client to carry on a suit without requiring to be supplied with funds up to hearing, that means the original hearing; & subsequently to that period he has a right to refuse to proceed without funds; but he has no right to withhold the papers from another solr. to conduct an appeal.

(2) An order to change solrs. is the discharge of the solr. by the client.—WEBSTER v. LE HUNT (1861), 25 J. P. 661; 9 W. R. 804.

463. ———.]—Dispute as to mode of remuneration.]—A dispute having arisen as to the mode & extent of a solr.'s remuneration, he refused to proceed in the cause until it had been settled. The solr. was ordered to deliver up the papers in the cause to the new solr., upon his undertaking to proceed with due diligence & to hold them subject to the existing lien thereon.

A client, when he retained a solr., expressed himself dissatisfied with the usual mode of remunerating solrs., but no definite arrangement was made as to any other mode of remuneration. Subsequently the solr., in a letter to the client, stated that "until I have the pleasure of seeing you, & of finally making some general & well understood arrangement with you on the subject of costs, it shall be understood on my part, that beyond costs out of pocket, I have no claim upon you personally." No arrangement was ever made, though the subject was often alluded to by the solr.:—Held: this did not amount to a concluded agreement by the solr. to claim nothing as of right but costs out of pocket.—WILSON v. EMMETT (1854), 19 Beav. 233; 52 E. R. 338.

468. ———.]—Necessity for strict proof of irregularity.]—The objection that the attorney, from whom a notice has been received, is not the attorney who commenced an action, & that there has been no order for a change of attorney, is of the strictest nature, & must be clearly made out. Upon a trial, a verdict had been found for deft. Pltf. obtained a rule for a new trial, upon payment of costs. The costs were not paid for ten years. In the interim pltf.'s attorney died, & a new attorney took his place. A term's notice was given of an application to the ct. to discharge the rule for a new trial; the notice being given by an attorney, & named in the record, who described

k. Application by solicitor—Without consent of client—On ground of non-payment of court fees.]—An order for a change of attorney ought not to be

She employed a solr., during her husband's life, first to mortgage the lands, & then to sell the equity of redemption. The sale was not completed during his life, although the mtge. was:—Held: the solr. was entitled to be paid his costs out of the purchase-money, which according to the contract, was to come to her separate use, when the same was paid after her husband's decease, although she could then have no separate estate.

A retainer implies a promise to pay all costs rightly & properly incurred upon the retainer.

A solr. cannot therefore brief a counsel whom his client has instructed him not to brief, & charge the client with the fees & other expenses incurred in delivering the brief, merely because the counsel is entitled to a brief under the rules of professional etiquette. The solr.'s proper course in such circumstances is either to explain the rule to the client & say that he must state the facts to any other counsel whom he briefs, & that such counsel may probably return the brief, or to say that he is himself so clearly governed by the rules & etiquette of the profession that if he is not allowed to brief the counsel in question he must throw up his retainer.—Re HARRISON, [1908] 1 Ch. 282; 77 L. (a) To Commence Proceedings.

531. General rule.]—Order to dismiss a bill, with costs to be paid by pltf.'s solr., the bill having been filed without special authority from pltf. A solr. may, in the exercise of the general authority given him by his client, defend a suit, but cannot institute one without a special authority for the purpose.—WRIGHT v. CASTLE (1817), 3 Mer. 12; 36 E. R. 5.

533. Whether writing necessary.]—Though it is not absolutely necessary, yet in correct practice, an attorney ought, before he commences an action, to take a written direction from his client for so doing.—OWEN v. ORD (1828), 3 C. & P. 349; 172 E. R. 451, N. P.

534. —.]—A solr. ought to have a special authority from his client for instituting a suit, but such authority need not be in writing.—LORD v. KELLETT (1833), 2 My. & K. 1; 39 E. R. 845.

535. —.]—Motion to take bill off the file, as filed without authority. There being assertion against assertion, the solr. must abide by the consequences of having omitted to take a written authority.—MARTINDALE v. LAWSON (1838), Coop. Pr. Cas. 83; 47 E. R. 411.

536. —.]—No solr. ought to commence a suit without being armed with an express retainer in writing (LANGDALE, M.R.).—ROWE v. WARD (1844), 4 L. T. O. S. 191.

537. —Imminent risk to client's interest.]—The general rule is that a solr. should have a written authority before instituting an action, & the contrary course is only excusable in cases of imminent danger & risk to the interests of the party; but even then the sanction of the party should be obtained at the earliest possible moment, or the action dropped.—TREVANION v. TREVANION (1844), 1 New Pract. Cas. 82; 4 L. T. O. S. 211.

538. Sufficiency of authority.]—A solr. received authority in 1831 to file a bill in an administration suit on behalf of a woman then unmarried. In 1836 he informed her that she & her husband would be co-pltfs. to a bill in the same suit. In 1849 he wrote to her as a widow, for information, to which she replied, hoping that there might be an immediate distribution. The solr. afterwards filed bills of supplement & revival in the suit, making her a co-pltf.:—Held: he had sufficient authority.—BEWLEY v. SEYMOUR (1850), 14 Jur. 213.

539. —.]—SWAN v. MELLEN (1892), 36 Sol. Jo. 668.

540. —Direction to recover estate—Ejectment proceedings commenced & discontinued.]—A. delivered papers to B., an attorney, telling him, "that she was entitled to an estate, & that she would pay him if she recovered it." B. took the papers, saying, "that he would do what he could for her," & without further communication, commenced an action of ejectment, which he afterwards abandoned under the conviction that A. had no title:—Held: B. acted without due transaction; he speaks for his client, binds his client, but not himself.—SHAW, SALTER & PLOMMER v. PHIPPS & COSGROVE (1926), 37 B. C. R. 184.—CAN.

g. —Where implied sanction by conduct.]—Where parties moved to have their names struck out of the record on the ground that they had been used by the solicitor without their authority, & the solicitor could not produce any written authority from them, the ct. refused the motion, the facts & documents in the case showing that the parties had been aware of the use of their names & had allowed a long space of time to elapse without taking any steps.—MCNALLY v. KNOX (1861), 5 L. T. 186.—IR.

Annotation:—Distd. Fray v. Voules (1859), 33 L. T. O. S. 133.

541. — Retainer to proceed against dilatory executors—Insufficient account obtained in probate action—Subsequent bill for account.]—A solr. obtained a retainer to proceed against exors. who had, after a long lapse of time, neglected to prove the will, & had rendered no account, to compel probate of the will, & to take such other proceedings for obtaining an account as might be necessary. He instituted a suit to compel probate, & obtained in it an account which was insufficient. He took then no other steps for three years, & then, without further consulting the client, filed a bill for an account; he had no other authority than that retainer, & the client denied any parol authority to file a bill:—Held: the retainer did not justify the solr., & the bill was dismissed with costs, to be paid by the solr.—ATKINSON v. ABBOTT (1855), 3 Drew. 251; 25 L. T. O. S. 314; 61 E. R. 899.

Annotation:—Consd. Wray v. Kemp (1884), 26 Ch. D. 169.

542. — Authority to country solicitor to act in administration of estate—Issue of writ by London agents.]—A retainer to a country solr. does not justify an action in which his London agents are the solrs. on the record.

A., an illiterate woman, being desirous of knowing whether there was any balance coming to her, as administratrix of C., her deceased husband, out of the proceeds of a sale by the mtgee. of property mortgaged by C., gave to B., a country solr., who had recovered judgment in an action against her, as administratrix, for a debt due to him from her deceased husband, this written retainer: "I hereby authorise you to act as my solr. in the administration of my late husband's estate, & authorise you to investigate the accounts of the mtgee., & take such steps as you may think proper in the matter on my behalf." A writ was subsequently issued by a London firm of solrs. in the names of A. & B., as plffs., claiming an account of the proceeds of sale of the mtged. property & payment of the balance, the claim by A. being "as legal representative of C.," by B. "as a creditor of C. who had obtained judgment against A., & had obtained execution by the appointment of a receiver of the balance due from C." Upon motion by A. that her name might be struck out of the writ, as having been issued without her knowledge & without any authority on her part:—Held: the retainer was not sufficient to justify the issue of the writ; but whether sufficient or not it was a retainer to B., & did not authorise the London firm to issue the writ in the name of A. as her solrs.—WRAY v. KEMP (1884), 26 Ch. D. 169; 53 L. J. Ch. 1020; 50 L. T. 552; 32 W. R. 334.

543. — Retainer to protect assets of trust—Authority to take proceedings for dissolution.]—

A retainer to solrs. "to take such steps as you may be advised against T. & his co-trustees, in order to protect the assets of the N. Trust," is a retainer to bring an action that the trust may be dissolved & its affairs wound up by the ct.—Re NATIONAL OLD AGE PENSIONS TRUST, STEVENS v. TAVENER (1912), 57 Sol. Jo. 114.

544. Application for habeas corpus.]—The relation of attorney & client on a special retainer for a specific purpose, or business not necessarily involving or importing a retainer to apply for a writ of habeas corpus, does not give an authority to the attorney to make such an application on behalf of his client.

In the case of an alleged lunatic, his retainer of an attorney to prosecute a petition of lunacy does not give such an authority, even although the attorney be denied access to him.—Re FITZGERALD, Ex p. CHILD (1854), 2 C. L. R. 1801; sub nom. Ex p. CHILD, 15 C. B. 238; 139 E. R. 413.

545. Communication of authority—Necessity for express communication by client to solicitor—Without intermediate agency.]—If there be not a written retainer, there must unquestionably be an authority to institute a suit communicated expressly by the client to the solr. without any intermediate agency.—Re GRAY, Ex p. INCORPORATED LAW SOCIETY (1869), 20 L. T. 730.

546. Judgment recovered under ordinary retainer—Authority to take proceedings in interpleader.]—A solr. who has recovered judgment for a client under an ordinary retainer has no authority, without special instructions, to engage in proceedings in interpleader.—JAMES v. RICKNELL (1887), 20 Q. B. D. 164; 57 L. J. Q. B. 113; 58 L. T. 278; 36 W. R. 280; 4 T. L. R. 169, D. C.

549. — Solicitor acting in matters connected with trust—Authority to enter appearance on behalf of trustees—In action for account.]—C. & D. were trustees of a will, under which the funds became divisible on the death of the tenant for life in June, 1890. The greater part of the trust funds were distributed during the autumn of 1890. D. died in Dec. 1890, & C. was left sole surviving trustee. The trust funds then consisted of £3,000 invested on mtge. & a small amount of railway shares. The firm of B. & G., of which G. was the sole surviving member, had always acted for the trustees. Notice had been given to pay off the mtge., & C., repeatedly wrote to G., who also acted for the mtgor., asking when the mtge. money would be paid. G. answered with plausible excuses that the mtgor. was selling other property to pay off the mtge., & delays had arisen in completion. C. having discovered this, moved to set aside the appearance & all subsequent proceedings. G. had meanwhile absconded, & it was found that he had received & retained the mtge. money:—Held: the fact that G. had acted as solr. for C. in all matters connected with the trust did not authorise him to enter an appearance for him as deft.—*Re GRAY, GRAY v. Authority of managing clerk.]—An attorney has a general authority to compromise an action on behalf his client, provided he act bonâ fide & reasonably, & not in defiance of the direct & positive instructions of the client, & this authority, it seems, extends to a managing clerk having the general conduct of the business.

Pltfs. employed A., an attorney, to sue B. for the price of a pianoforte sold & delivered. The cause having proceeded as far as the joinder of issue, A. finding B. unable to pay, agreed with him, by his managing clerk, that pltfs. should take back the pianoforte, & that the costs should be paid by certain instalments. Pltfs. on being informed of this arrangement, repudiated it, & A. gave notice of trial:—Held: upon a motion to stay the proceedings on the ground that the action was settled, this compromise was within the general scope of the attorney's authority, & binding as between pltfs. & B.—PRESTWICH v. 582. ———— Authority of London or other agent.]—The solr. on the record, whether in London as agent for a country solr. or in a district registry as agent for a London solr., has a general authority to compromise an action on behalf of his client, provided he acts bonâ fide & reasonably, & not in defiance of his direct & positive instructions; & in either case the lay client will be bound although there is no privity between him & the agent on the record.—Re NEWEN, CARRUTHERS v. 583. ———— Instructions by client not to compromise.]—An action for debt being called on for hearing, counsel for deft. consented to judgment against his client for part only of the claim, pltf. abandoning the balance. Without the knowledge of counsel on either side, or of solrs. for pltfs., deft. had given instructions to her solrs. that the case was not to be settled. 591. — Parties consulting family solicitor—Agreement not quite in accordance with rights of parties—Compromise to avoid litigation.]—Generally the ct. will support an agreement of compromise entered into after the parties have jointly consulted the family solr., even though the agreement may not be quite in accordance with their rights, the very object of the compromise being to avoid the necessity of having the exact relative rights determined by litigation; but the family solr. is not entitled to keep those consulting him in the dark as to their rights because he thinks it is for the advantage of all parties to compromise & that if they know their exact rights there would be no chance of a compromise.

Where one party entered into a compromise relating to her interests under a will under a false impression as to her legal rights, arising from a wrong interpretation placed upon counsel's opinion by a common solr. acting for all parties:—Held: the compromise was not binding upon her.—*Re ROBERTS, ROBERTS v. 593. — Client's conduct inducing belief in authority—Effect of client's misunderstanding.]—If a client by his conduct induces his solr. to believe that he is authorised to make a certain compromise in an action which the solr. is conducting on behalf of the client, & the solr., reasonably relying on that conduct & believing that he has the authority of the client, makes the compromise, the client is bound whether he intended to give that authority or not, & whether he in fact understood or did not understand the terms of the compromise.

Before a county ct. action was tried a settlement was arrived at between the solr. for the respective parties, & a memorandum embodying its terms was signed by the solrs. This memorandum was not read by deft., but it was read over to her by her solr. or his son, & she seemed to assent to its terms. The action was thereupon, by consent of the county ct. judge & the solr. on both sides, struck out. Although deft. seemed to assent to the terms of the compromise, she did not in fact understand them & did not mean to assent to them. Subsequently an agreement in writing, signed by the solrs. for both parties, containing the terms of the memorandum, was sent to deft., who repudiated it upon the ground that the terms of the compromise which she authorised her solr. to effect were not contained either in the memorandum or in the written agreement:—Held: deft. was bound by the compromise made by her solr., & was liable in damages for the breach of it.—LITTLE v. SPREADBURY, [1910] 2 K. B. 658; 79 L. J. K. B. 1119; 102 L. T. 829; 26 T. L. R. 552; 54 Sol. Jo. 618, D. C.

604. Assent to appointment of umpire.] — An umpire was appointed by lot, in consequence of an agreement by the arbitrators. This was not known or assented to by the parties, but was known to the attorney of the party applying to set aside the award. When, however, the umpire was so appointed he was specially objected to by the arbitrator appointed by that party; & that fact was not known to the attorney:—Held: there was not a sufficient assent to the mode of appointment, because the whole facts were not within the knowledge of the party assenting; & an award made by an umpire so appointed was bad.

In 1881 an order for winding up the society was made, & the bankers claimed to retain the deeds as security for the balance of their account. B. Authority to Receive Payment for Client.

(a) In General.

627. General rule.—It is well settled that it is not within the ordinary business of a solr. to receive purchase-money belonging to his client or money due to him on mtge. nor to receive money from him for the purpose of investment generally, & one partner is not liable for the misapplication of money so received by another without his privity. Secus, when the money is received for the purpose of being invested on a particular security.—*BOURDILLON v. 631. Whether general authority to take proceedings sufficient.—A general written authority by a foreigner & his wife resident abroad, to a solr. in this country, to take all necessary measures for obtaining payment to the wife of a legacy, which had been paid into ct. under Legacy Duty Act, 1796 (c. 52):—Held: upon the petition of the husband & wife, to authorise payment to the solr.—Ex p. DE BEAUMONT (1849), 13 Jur. 354.

632. —A general authority from a party out of the jurisdiction to his solrs., to take any necessary proceedings for obtaining payment of his share of the fund in the suit out of ct.:—Held: on petition, not to authorise payment of it to the solrs.—*WADDILOVE v. PART IV. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 3.—B. (a).

629 i. Necessity for express authority.—A power of attorney or other written authority is necessary to authorise the payment of money out of ct. to the solr. even though the parties to whom it is coming are numerous, & not resident in America.—SWAN v. MARMORA IRON WORKS CO. (1867), 2 Ch. Ch. 155.—CAN.

629 ii. —The retainer of an attorney or solr. to collect a demand, & to take such proceedings as he may deem proper to effect this object, gives him authority to receive the amount before or after suit, & to discharge effectually the party making the payment, unless the client restricts or terminates the authority given to his attorney or solr.—MOODY v. TYRRELL (1875), 6 P. R. 313.—CAN.

629 v. —In the absence of legal proceedings to enforce a mtge. security, there is nothing in the mere relation of solr. & client from which an authority may be implied to the solr. to receive interest or principal due the client on the mtge., even though the solr. arranged the mtge. loan. (b) Evidence of Authority—Production of Deed.

See, now, Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 69.

633. General rule.—The possession of the executed conveyance, with the signed receipt for the consideration money indorsed is not in itself an authority to the solr. of the vendor to receive the purchase-money (LORD CHELMSFORD, C.).

A solr. is not by virtue of his office entitled to receive purchase-moneys, even though he may have possession of the deed of conveyance (TURNER, L.J.).—VINEY v. CHAPLIN (1858), 2 De G. & J. 468; 27 L. J. Ch. 434; 31 L. T. O. S. 143; 4 Jur. N. S. 619; 6 W. R. 562; 44 E. R. 1071, L. C. & L. JJ.

634. Purchaser not obliged to pay solicitor.—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 56, does not authorise vendors who are trustees with a power of sale to require the purchaser to pay the purchase-money to their solr. on production of the deed of conveyance duly executed in cases where before the Act they could not have required the purchaser to pay the purchase-money to their solr. under a special authority.

Trustees of real estate with a power to sell & give receipts, sold the estate. The purchasers required that the vendors should attend in person to receive the purchase-money, or should authorise the purchasers to pay it into a bank to the joint account of the vendors. The vendors insisted that the money should be paid to their solr. on his producing the conveyance duly executed. They gave no special reason why the money should be paid to the solr., but relied on Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 56:—Held: sect. 56 had no application, & the purchasers had a right to insist on their requisition.—Re BELLAMY & METROPOLITAN BOARD OF WORKS (1883), 24 Ch. The required deposit was paid by the purchaser to the auctioneers, who acknowledged the receipt & signed the memorandum of sale as "agents for the vendors." The auctioneers subsequently paid the balance of the deposit after deductions for costs to the solrs. for the vendors. —This was an action by a legatee under the will of F., who died in 1870, asking for payment of her legacy, which was directed to be raised out of real estate, & the non-raising of which she alleged to be a breach of trust, & the execution of the trusts of F.'s will. There had originally been three exors. & trustees of F.'s will; one of these, J., still survived, & was a party to the action. O., another of the exors., had died in 1878. The exors. of O. were made defts., but claimed to be dismissed on the ground that in Oct. 1879, they had issued advertisements for claims under Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859 (c. 35), s. 29, that no claim had been made for the legacy, & they had distributed the whole of O.'s estate. Pltf. insisted that they ought to be retained as defts.: (a) because J., the surviving trustee, had acted as solr. for the exors. of O., & had committed a breach of trust in not seeing that pltf.'s legacy was raised, & that the exors. of O. had constructive notice of this breach of trust when they distributed the estate; (b) because pltf. had a right to follow O.'s estate in the hands of the beneficiaries, & his exors. ought to be defts. in order that an account might be had against his estate:—Held: under the circumstances no notice of pltf.'s claim could be brought home to the exors. of O.—*Re FREWEN, FREWEN v. 672. General rule.]—Solrs., who were retained by O. to act for him in negotiating the purchase of a patent had previously obtained from the vendor of the patent a commission note under which they were to receive certain payments in the event of a purchaser being found by them; this note was shown to O. by the solrs. & remained in his possession some days previously to the contract for sale being entered into. O. purchased the patent, & the solrs. with his knowledge recovered payment from the vendor of £210 for commission. O. died, & the solrs. delivered their bill of costs to his exors., who on taxation sought to surcharge the solrs. with the £210 so received by them; the taxing master allowed the surcharge. On a summons to review this finding:—Held: (1) O.'s exors. were not entitled to treat the £210 paid by the vendor to the solrs. as money received to O.'s use, or in any way to surcharge them; (2) the rule applied in O'Brien v. Lewis, No. 691, post, did not govern the present case, as the commission was paid, not by the client, but by the vendor; but the solrs., had made a bargain which was not merely improper, but such as to place them in a position in which it was impossible for them to fulfil the duties which they had undertaken to both vendor & purchaser of the patent.

All transactions between solr. & client which result in the solr.'s obtaining a benefit for himself are subjected by cts. of law to strict scrutiny when called in question by the client & are treated as imposing obligations on the solr. of greater or less stringency (STIRLING, L.J.).—Re HASLAM & HIER-

688. Attestation of warrant of attorney—Independent solicitor.]—Where a warrant of attorney has been attested on behalf of deft. by an attorney originally suggested by pltf. in order to render it valid it is necessary that deft. should be distinctly aware that he had the option of calling in another attorney.

Semble: in such a case it is not sufficient for pltf. to inform deft. that he must have an attorney present on his part, but he ought to inform him that such an attorney ought to be named & chosen by himself.—CAMERON v. BICKNELL (1841), Woll. 129.

SUB-SECT. 2.—GIFTS.

A. Made During Subsistence of Relationship.

(a) In General.

684. What constitutes relationship.]—GODDARD v. CARLISLE, No. 385, ante.

685. — Gratuitous service of solicitor—Resort to independent professional advice.]—In order to bring a case within the rule that a solr. can receive no gift or reward from his client, there must be clear & unequivocal evidence of the relationship between the parties, that advantage was taken of that relationship, & that what was given was a reward to the solr. for his services.

Where a bill was filed by the legal personal representative of a lady to set aside certain deeds executed by her in favour of her brother-in-law, a solr., & it appeared that he had never done or charged for anything in the course of the transactions as her solr.; that he had when necessary, resorted to other professional advice on her behalf, & that he had exercised no undue influence over her:—Held: the relationship between the parties was not sufficient to invalidate the deeds, & the bill must be dismissed with costs.—RICHARDS v. FRENCH (1870), 22 L. T. 327; 18 W. R. 636.

686. Presumption of undue influence—Ignorance of dower.]—It is an established rule in cts. of equity, that no gift or gratuity to an attorney, beyond his fair professional demands, made during the time that he continues to conduct or manage the affairs of the donor, shall be permitted to stand; & more especially if such gift or gratuity arises immediately out of the subject then under the attorney's conduct or management, & if the donor is at the time ignorant of the nature & value of the property so given.—MIDDLETON v. WELLES (1785), 4 Bro. Parl. Cas. 245; 2 E. R. 166, H. L.; affg. S. C. sub nom. WELLES v. MIDDLETON (1784), 1 Cox, Eq. Cas. 112, L. C.

688. —.]—Bill to set aside leases, obtained by an agent & attorney from his principal, dismissed as to voluntary leases, being pure gifts; & no fraud, misrepresentation, etc., with costs as to some, intended as a provision upon & inducement to the marriage of pltf. without costs as to others the relation of the parties & circumstances upon general principles of public policy & utility justifying inquiry. Another lease was decreed to be delivered up, the verdict in an issue establishing that a full consideration was not paid.—HARRIS v. TREMENHEERE (1808), 15 Ves. 34; 33 E. R. 668, L. C.

689. —.]—By an indenture made between a client & his solr., the client, in consideration of £100 conveyed certain land to his solr. The solr., who had himself prepared the conveyance, alleged that it was a voluntary deed, & that no consideration had passed, the £100 being introduced to save the amount of stamp duty upon a voluntary instrument:—Held: the transaction could not be maintained; & solr. was declared a trustee for the representatives of the client.

There is certainly no rule in this ct. that a solr. may not purchase his client's property even while the relation subsists between them; but then such transactions are to be viewed with the utmost jealousy, & the onus is thrown upon the solr. to show that everything is perfectly fair, & that the vendor knew what he was doing, & that the full price was given, & of course, that no advantage was taken of the character of solr. (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).—TOMSON v. JUDGE (1855), 3 Drew. 306; 3 Eq. Rep. 850; 24 L. J. Ch. 785; 25 L. T. O. S. 233; 1 Jur. N. S. 583; 3 W. R. 561; 61 E. R. 920.

690. —.]—Influence arising from the professional relation between solr. & client will vitiate a gift from the latter to the former, but the effect of that influence may be removed by evidence.—Re HOLMES' ESTATE, WOODWARD v. HUMPAGE (1861), 3 Giff. 337; 5 L. T. 378; 8 Jur. N. S. 252; 66 E. R. 439.

Annotation:—Refd. Mitchell v. Homfray (1881), 8 Q. B. D. 587.

691. —.]—The law has laid down certain rules & scales of charges by which the services of a solr. are to be remunerated, & it is therefore imperative on the solr. not to bargain or permit his client to promise that any additional benefit should be given beyond the legal remuneration. A gift by the client to a solr. for services rendered during the existence of that relation between them is against public policy & therefore invalid.

A suit was instituted to recover a sum of £300 which had been retained by a firm of solrs. on the ground that the same was a gift in addition to their costs for services performed:—Held: notwithstanding the lapse of nine years, the gift was invalid, & therefore pltf. was entitled to recover.—O'BRIEN v. LEWIS (1863), 32 L. J. Ch. 569; 8

Though this ct. holds that it is highly improper for a solr. to derive a personal advantage in the shape of gifts from his clients, or in the shape of the liquidation of his bills untaxed & undelivered, still the ct. cannot approve of clients entering into transactions with their solr., whereby they obtain from him present relief, & at the same time indulge the expectation that the ct. will afterwards, at their instance, annul the whole transaction on the ground of the relation subsisting between them.—GARDENER v. ENNAR, HUMBY v. MOODY (1866), 35 Beav. 549; 55 E. R. 1009.

695. —.]—Deft., a solr., acted for pltf., a widow in the administration of her husband's estate, of which she was the extrix. The husband had for many years had dealings with deft. & had employed him as solr. in a number of matters, but deft. had never delivered any bills of costs to the husband. After his death deft. delivered to pltf. an account of his dealings with her husband showing a balance of £563 due to deft. from the husband's estate. The account contained a number of items for costs which were statute barred. Pltf., in ignorance of Stat. Limitations, & without having any independent advice gave to deft. at his request acknowledgments in writing of the indebtedness of the estate to deft.

In an action by pltf. for an account:—Held: deft. by receiving these acknowledgments had obtained a benefit from his client within the meaning of the well settled rule of equity with regard to a person who is in a fiduciary position & deft. was, therefore, not entitled to rely on the acknowledgments for the purpose of taking the statute barred items in the account out of Stat. Limitations.—LLOYD v. COOTE & BALL, [1915] 1 K. B. 242; 84 L. J. K. B. 567; 112 L. T. 344, D. C.

696. — Excludes presumption of gift—From relationship of mother & son.—A son acted as his mother's solr., & with her consent, lent £2,500 belonging to her, with other money, upon a bond conditioned for payment to himself absolutely, of the amount thereby secured, without any declaration of trust, except a memorandum, whereby the son acknowledged that he held £2,500, & undertook to pay the interest thereof to the mother during life. The son died in his mother's lifetime, & his exors. claimed the principal sum, subject to a life interest in the mother, as a gift from her to the son:—Held: the relation of solr. & client, subsisting between the son & mother, excluded the ordinary presumption in favour of the transaction being a gift, & threw the burden of proof upon the exors.; & the evidence being insufficient to establish their case, the ct. declared the son's exors. to be merely trustees for the mother.—GARRETT v. WILKINSON (1848), 2 De G. & Sm. 244; 64 E. R. 110.

(b) Independent Advice.

698. —.]—The client of a solr. without independent advice, made a voluntary conveyance to him of leasehold premises in trust for herself for life, & after her death in trust for his wife, who was her niece, for her separate use absolutely:—Held: the well settled rule of equity being that such a gift could not be supported, unless the donor had competent & independent advice in making it, the conveyance must be declared void.—LILES v. TERRY, [1895] 2 Q. B. 679; 65 L. J. Q. B. 34; 73 L. T. 428; 44 W. R. 116; 12 T. L. R. 26; 40 Sol. Jo. 53, C. A.

699. — Gift to son of solicitor.—A solr. who was a trustee for a married woman under a settlement & also her husband's solr. prepared a deed by which she conferred a benefit on a son of the solr. & renounced rights she had under the settlement. After hearing the solr.'s explanation of the deed she executed it:—Held: she was not bound by the deed, on the ground that the real effect of it on her rights & position was not in fact explained to her, & also on the ground that it was the duty of the solr. to take care that she did not execute the deed without having independent advice.—WILLIS v. BARRON, [1902] A. C. 271; 71 L. J. Ch. 609; 86 L. T. 805; 18 T. L. R. 602, H. L.; affg. S. C. sub nom. BARRON v. WILLIS, [1900] 2 Ch. 121, C. A.

700. — Gift of trifling benefit.—It is incumbent upon persons who receive benefits from others, towards whom they stand in a confidential relation, to show that they had competent & independent advice, & this general principle is not affected by the age or capacity of the persons conferring the benefits, or the nature of the benefits conferred, but this principle does not extend to interfere with mere trifling gifts, without proof not only of influence derived from the confidential relation, but of mala fides, or of undue or unfair exercise of the influence.—RHODES v. BATE (1866), 1 Ch. App. 252; 13 L. T. 778; 12 Jur. N. S. 178; 14 W. R. 292, L. JJ.

701. Duty of independent adviser—To decline to act on refusal of advice.]—Where a young person is minded to make a voluntary settlement in favour of a parent, it is not enough that he should have independent advice unless he acts on that advice; it is the duty of a solr. independently advising an intending settlor to protect him against himself, & not merely against the personal influence of the donee in the particular transaction; & if his advice is not accepted he should decline to act further for the intending settlor.—POWELL v. POWELL, [1900] 1 Ch. 243; 69 L. J. Ch. 164; 82 L. T. 84; 44 Sol. Jo. 134.

702. Independent advice insufficient.]—A gift by a client to a solr. raises prima facie the presumption that it was unduly influenced by the fiduciary relation subsisting between them; & the onus is on the solr. to prove that the gift was uninfluenced by that relation. The presumption is, however, not irrebuttable, but it is not sufficiently rebutted by the mere fact of the client having employed a separate & independent solr., even though without any fraud or collusion on the part of the two solrs., to advise him in the matter of the gift; for the presumption will continue so long as the relation of solr. & client continues for other purposes outside the gift, or at all events until it can be clearly inferred that the influence arising from the relation no longer exists. On the other hand, there is no objection to a sale by a client to his solr., provided the solr. can prove (a) that the client was fully informed, (b) that he had competent independent advice, & (c) that the price given was a fair one.—WRIGHT v. CARTER, [1903] 1 Ch. 27; 72 L. J. Ch. 138; 87 L. T. 624; 51 W. R. 196; 19 T. L. R. 29, C. A.

B. Made After Termination of Relationship.

703. Gift after cause determined.]—Gift to an attorney after the cause was over, without proof of anything improper, not set aside. It would have been otherwise, if before the cause, as in contemplation of it; or during its progress.—OLDHAM v. HAND (1751), 2 Ves. Sen. 259; 28 E. R. 167, L. C.

705. —.]—HOLMAN v. LOYNES, No. 745, post.

706. —.]—To prevent the operation of the rule that a solr. shall not take a gift from his client while the relation subsists, there must not only be a total absence of fraud, misrepresentation, or even suspicion, but there must be a severance of the confidential relation.—MORGAN v. MINETT (1877), 6 Ch. D. 638; 36 L. T. 948; 25 W. R. 744.

C. Affirmed After Termination of Relationship.

707. Confirmation must be subsequent to termination of relationship.]—A solr. had in the year 1880 acted as the solr. of G. in an action against B. The action was compromised by the payment by B. of £5,000. The solr.'s costs were paid, & in consideration of his exertions G. on June 7, 1880, made him a special gift of £1,000 out of the money recovered. The gift was made without independent advice. The relationship of solr. & client closed shortly after the gift. There was subsequently another business transaction between G. & the solr., & the relationship of solr. & client was severed in Mar. 1882. In Apr. 1883, G. called upon the solr. There was some evidence that on that occasion he told G. that she was entitled to demand back her gift, but that she stated in effect that she intended to adhere to it. G. died in June, 1883:—Held: the evidence did not show that, after the relationship of solr. & client had come to an end, G. had, with full knowledge of her rights, confirmed the gift, & her personal representative was therefore entitled to repayment of the £1,000 with interest at 4 per cent. per annum from the date of the gift.—TYARS v. ALSOP (1889), 61 L. T. 8; 53 J. P. 212; 37 W. R. 339; 5 T. L. R. 242, C. A.

708. Validity of ratification by will.]—Pltf. claimed, as heir-at-law of A., who, as the bill alleged, when in very embarrassed circumstances, had executed a voidable conveyance to his solr. The bill after stating a pretence on the part of defts., who claimed under the solr., that A. had confirmed the conveyance by his will, charged that he had died intestate as to the premises in question, & prayed that the conveyance & any testamentary disposition by him in confirmation thereof might be declared null & void. Plea, that A. by will, after reciting the probability of the conveyance being disputed, had ratified & confirmed it, allowed.—STUMP v. GABY (1852), 2 De G. M. & G. 623; 22 L. J. Ch. 352; 20 L. T. 709. — Confirming sale—Sale held invalid.]—A solr. purchased a property from his client, who, by a codicil, confirmed the sale & devised the property to the solr. The ct., having, on the evidence, held the sale invalid, also decided that the codicil was inoperative in equity.—WATERS v. THORN (1856), 22 Beav. 547; 52 E. R. 1219.

SUB-SECT. 3.—PURCHASES AND SALES.

A. In General.

710. Power of solicitor to contract with client.]—An attorney may contract with his client, provided no advantage be taken of the confidential relation. If he be employed to sell, & chooses to deal for the estate to be sold, he must withdraw from the connection, or put himself completely at arm's length, & show, if the contract be questioned, that he has given the same advice for the benefit of his client as he would have done if the sale had been to a third party. If employed as a general land agent, he is bound, if he purchases any of the estates in respect of which he is agent, to communicate to his principal all the knowledge acquired by him as agent, of the real value of the estate. But the mere circumstance of his being attorney does not prevent his entering into a valid contract with his client.—CANE v. ALLEN (LORD) (1814), 2 Dow. 289; 3 E. R. 869, H. L.

710 i. Power of solicitor to contract with client.]—A solr. selling to his client cannot support the sale, unless

719. Evidence of payment of consideration.]—Where an attorney takes a security or makes a purchase from his client, it is incumbent on him to prove the advance or payment of the money by some evidence other than the instrument creating the security or the conveyance.

A purchase by a solr. from a client having been set aside on the ground that the sufficiency of the consideration was not established, an inquiry was directed with a view to ascertain whether the purchase-money was paid. No evidence was adduced on the inquiry to prove the payment, except the acknowledgment in the body of the deed & the usual indorsed receipt. It appeared that no further evidence could be had, & that there was no reason to suppose that any evidence had been destroyed:—Held: the acknowledgment & receipt were not sufficient evidence as against parties claiming under the client, & the purchase-money must be considered not to have been paid.—GRESLEY v. MOUSLEY (1862), 3 De G. F. & J. 433; 31 L. J. Ch. 537; 6 L. T. 86; 8 Jur. N. S. 320; 10 W. R. 222; 45 E. R. 946, L. JJ.

720. Right to object to title of client—Solicitor employed in original purchase.]—A., having purchased land, left the investigation of the title to C. & D., solrs., in partnership. They advise that a good title can be made, & the purchase is thereupon completed. D., the solr., was a trustee in the conveyance to bar dower. A. dies, & his devisee sells the property to D., one of the solrs. D. did not object to the title until eight months afterwards; in his answer he said he had no recollection of the title:—Held: a solr., who has been employed to advise on a title, could not, on purchasing it himself of his client, set up an objection to it, which he did not think of any importance when advising his principal.—BEEVOR v. SIMPSON (1829), Tambl. 69; 48 E. R. 28.

721. Purchase by solicitor from creditors in bankruptcy.]—A common agent or solr. in ct. employed on behalf of the creditors of the estate of a bkpt. in Scotland, may be considered in the nature of a trustee; a purchase therefore by him of any part of the bkpt.'s estate may be set aside; & at all events will be so if there appear any circumstances of improper or negligent conduct in such agent.—YORK BUILDINGS CO. v. MACKENZIE (1795), 8 Bro. Parl. Cas. 42; 3 E. R. 432, H. L.

722. Purchase from trustee in bankruptcy of client.]—The obligation on a solr. dealing with his client extend to the case of a dealing between a solr. & the trustee in bkpcy. of his client. L. was, under the will of his mother, entitled to an interest in real estate, but whether for life or absolute was doubtful. He became bkpt., & a trustee in bkpcy. was appointed. P., the solr. of the bkpt., had as solr., & having acted for some years as receiver, acquired an intimate knowledge of the nature & value of the estate. He had in negotiating mtges. for L. to consider the extent of his interest under the will; had obtained the opinion of counsel that it was for life only; but had himself formed an opinion that it was, probably, absolute, & not as he had described in his correspondence with the parties concerned merely for life; & he also formed an opinion that the estate was more valuable than the rental showed. He did not disclose his opinion to L., or to the trustee in bkpcy., or to his solr. He was employed by the bkpt. to negotiate with the trustee for the purchase of his interest for the benefit of his wife & children. In the negotiation, as solr. & agent for the bkpt. he found that the trustee could be induced to sell the interest for a very small sum, £77, & he availed himself of his knowledge, & contracted to purchase, secretly, for himself, but in the name of his brother, an interest which, as the ct. afterwards, in an action for administration, held, was absolute, & was worth some thousands of pounds. He never suggested to the trustee that he intended to purchase for himself, but gave him & his solr. to believe that the purchase was on behalf of the bkpt.'s family. In an action by a subsequent trustee in bkpcy. to set aside the sale:—Held: the trustee in bkpcy. stood in the place of the bkpt. for the purpose, the solr. for the bkpt. could not be allowed to hold as against the trustee an advantage obtained by him in the purchase from him by means of the knowledge which he had gained whilst acting as solr. for the bkpt., & P. & his brother were trustees for the trustee in bkpcy. & must give up to him every advantage of the purchase.—LUDDY'S TRUSTEE v. PEARD (1886), 33 Ch. D. 500; 55 L. J. Ch. 884; 55 L. T. 137; 35 W. R. 44; 2 T. L. R. 841.

723. Setting aside sale—Effect of delay.]—Lapse of time is a ground for not setting aside a purchase though the contract was to be kept secret & the purchase was made by a solr. from his client, & the question may be determined independently of the question of value.—CLANRICARDE (MARQUIS) v. HENNING (1861), 30 Beav. 175; 30 L. J. Ch. 865; 5 L. T. 168; 7 Jur. N. S. 1113; 9 W. R. 912; 54 E. R. 855.

729. Sale to client at price in excess of market value.]—In July, 1892, the trustees of an indenture of settlement, dated Sept. 3, 1890, had a fund of £1,100 for investment. By an indenture dated Feb. 15, 1877, a sum of £2,100 had been secured, but part of the mtged. premises had been sold for £1,000. The balance consisted of three brick & stucco houses, held for ninety-nine years at a ground rent of £9 2s. 6d. S., the solr. of the trustees, transferred this mtge. to the trustees & received the £1,100, without explaining what he was doing. It was alleged that at this time the property, which was in one of the worst districts in the town, was only worth £200, & the evidence for the defence did not prove that it was worth more than £600 in 1892. S. paid interest until his death, & this action was brought by the trustees claiming that the security should be realised & the balance made good by S.'s exor. Trustee Act, 1888 (c. 59), did not apply, it was said, as S. retained the money & converted it to his own use. For debt. it was said the claim was one for negligence, & was barred by Stat. Limitations. The money was not still held by a trustee. Even if S. ought to have had a valuation made, his omission to do so was a mere common law tort:—Held: the property was now, & also at the date of the transfer, an insufficient security for £1,100, & the solr. had transferred a security belonging to himself with knowledge that to take the security involved a breach of trust; the trustees never knew the facts, & S. had received the £1,100 as cash, & debt., admitting assets, an order must be made for the realisation of the security, & debt. must make up the deficiency & pay the costs of the action.—MITCHINSON v. SPENCER (1902), 86 L. T. 618.

C. Necessity for Independent Advice.

730. General rule — Independent advice advisable.]—If a solr. purchase from his client, the purchaser should take care that the vendor has the advice of another solr.

A solr. who conducts the sale of property cannot become the purchaser without full explanation to the vendor, & informing him of his, the solr.'s, intention to purchase.—JONES v. PRICE (1852), 20 L. T. O. S. 49, L. C.

731. — — —.]—If persons standing in a certain relation to one another deal as vendor & purchaser, the ct. expects the purchaser, if the purchase is complained of by the vendor, to show that the vendor had due protection afforded him—thus, if a guardian purchases of his ward, though that relation may have ceased only for a short time, so that the influence of the guardian may be supposed to exist, the burden of proof is upon him to show that his quondam ward was protected—it is no answer to a bill seeking to impeach the transaction to say, "I have obtained the conveyance, now prove that it was obtained wrongfully."

The same doctrine applies to an attorney buying of or selling to his client.—HARRISON v. GUEST (1856), 6 De G. M. & G. 424; 25 L. J. Ch. 544; 27 L. T. O. S. 208; 2 Jur. N. S. 911; 4 W. R. 585; 43 E. R. 1298, L. C.; on appeal (1860), 8 H. L. Cas. 481, H. L.

The circumstances of the employment may be considered, & the amount of influence estimated. Semble: an attorney purchasing from his client ought to insist on the intervention of another professional adviser.—*PISANI v. 734. ———.]—An advocate in Aberdeen is the same as an attorney or solr. elsewhere. Hence when an Aberdeen advocate purchased, nominally for his brother, but really for himself, certain houses, the property of two ladies for whom he was agent, concealing from them the fact that he was buying for himself:—Held: the purchase could not be enforced.

Assuming that in every respect this was a sale which might have been supported had the ladies been told that their agent was himself the purchaser, it cannot be supported, that fact not being disclosed.

An attorney is not affected by the absolute disability to purchase which attaches to a trustee. But, for manifest reasons, if he becomes the buyer of his client's property, he does so at his peril. He must be prepared to show . . . that his client has had the advantage of the best professional assistance which if he had been engaged in a transaction with a third party he could possibly have apposed. . . . There must be uberrimæ fides between the attorney & the client (LORD O'HAGAN).—MCPHERSON v. WATT (1877), 3 App. Cas. 254, H. L.

735. Independent advice must be adequate.]—Where a purchase by a solr. from a client is defended on the ground of the intervention of other professional assistance, it must be shown that the new adviser had a proper opportunity of discharging his duty. But the intervention of a solr. who is known by the purchaser to neglect his duty is no protection; or if it appears that a solr., purchasing from his late client, is aware of neglect of duty in the new adviser, & especially if the purchaser withholds or suppresses from him any information of importance, the transaction is vitiated.—GIBBS v. DANIEL (1862), 4 Giff. 1; 7 L. T. 27; 9 Jur. N. S. 636; 10 W. R. 688; 66 E. R. 595.

736. Independent advice dispensed with — Transaction manifestly fair.]—WRIGHT v. CARTER, No. 702, ante.

737. ———.]—A transaction, such as the purchase of property under an option, where the vendor & purchaser are client & solr., or where a similar confidential relationship exists, & the vendor has not had independent advice, cannot be upheld unless it is proved affirmatively that the purchaser disclosed, without reservation, all the information in his possession, & that the transaction was a fair one in all the circumstances. To fulfil those conditions it must be shown that the solr. advised his client as diligently, & that the transaction was as advantageous, as if the client had been dealing with a stranger. This principle is of wide application, & should not be regarded as a technical rule of English law. Although the relationship of solr. & client, in a strict sense, has terminated, the same principle applies so long as the confidence naturally arising from that relationship is proved, or may be presumed, to continue.—DEMERARA BAUXITE CO. v. HUBBARD, [1923] A. C. 673; 92 L. J. P. C. 148; 129 L. T. 517, P. C.

738. Duty of solicitor to give all reasonable advice against himself—Where no independent advice.]—On a question of the propriety of a purchase by a solr. from his client, the solr., in order to sustain the transaction must, if he was solr. in hac re, show that he gave his client all that reasonable advice against himself which his office of solr. would have made it his duty to have given him against a third person; but the nature of the proof varies according to the subject of the purchase, the relative situation of the parties, & the equality of the footing upon which they stand, in reference to the subject of the contract; & although the relationship of attorney & client may exist, yet if it has no existence in hac re, the rule with regard to the onus of proof may no longer be applicable.

It appeared by the evidence, although it was not stated on the pleadings, that the value of the minerals in an estate purchased by the solr. from his client was considerably increased after the purchase, owing to a railroad then contemplated having been afterwards formed through the immediate neighbourhood. Semble: this was a merely speculative advantage, the communication of which to his client the solr. would not be bound to prove, the parties being in the same situation with reference to the means of forming an opinion upon it.—*EDWARDS v. land for £8,000, ten times its value. The land was conveyed, & the funds in ct. mtgd. by A. B. for the £8,000; but the £1,000 was not advanced at the time. The ct., on the ground of the gross inadequacy of value, coupled with the other circumstances of the case, set aside the whole transaction with costs.

Inadequacy of value, though it is not by itself a sufficient ground for avoiding a sale, is yet of great weight when coupled with circumstances of oppression.—COCKELL v. TAYLOR, COLLETT v. PRESTON, PRESTON v. COLLETT (1851), 15 Beav. 103; 21 L. J. Ch. 545; 51 E. R. 475.

742. Inadequacy coupled with financial difficulties of client.—G., a tenant for life in a marriage settlement, was thereby empowered to make leases for lives of lands in Ireland, at the best rent, without fine, & a power was also given, with the consent of trustees, to raise any sum of money. The trustees, in pursuance of the power, consented that G. should, by mortgaging all or any part of the lands, or in any other manner he should think fit, raise any sum of money not exceeding £5,000.

Under this power & consent G., in consideration of £300 & a rent, granted to V. part of the lands in settlement upon a lease for lives. The grant & a receipt expressing that the £300 was raised under the power & consent as part of the £5,000 were duly registered. Before, & at the date of this grant, V. was the solr. of G., who was involved in litigation, & in distress.

The rent, with the premium calculated at 6 per cent. was considerably short of the annual value of the lands.

Upon a bill, by a tenant in remainder under the settlement, to set aside the lease, & on appeal:—Held: the lease was a good execution of the power to raise money; but void, as obtained by a solr. from his client, in circumstances of embarrassment, & at an under value.—WARD v. HARTPOLE (1776), 3 Bli. 470; 4 E. R. 671, H. L.

744. —.]—A solr., having agreed to purchase of his client a certain property, filed a bill for specific performance:—Held: under the circumstances of the case, the burden of supporting the contract lay on pltf.; & whatever the rule might be in other cases, this was one in which demonstration of the full value having been given was part of the burden thrown on him who supported the contract; & he not having proved that full value was given, the contract could not be enforced.—THOMAS v. PHILIPPS (1846), 8 L. T. O. S. 272; 11 Jur. 80.

745. —.]—(1) An attorney was engaged in the sale of his client's property by auction, on which occasion a small portion only of the property was sold. He was subsequently employed in making out abstracts of title of the portion unsold, & sixteen months after the completion of the abstracts during which term there had been no employment of the attorney professionally by the client, the attorney bought a portion of the unsold property & debited the client in his books for drawing the agreement for sale. The consideration which was on the face of the purchase deed stated to have been paid was in fact composed partly of a previous debt for costs & partly of such an annuity as the balance of the purchase-money would according to the Govt. Tables obtain for a healthy life. The client died three years & a half after the sale. It was in evidence that the client was of intemperate habits for many years previously & up to the transaction in question. It did not appear that the attorney had made any special inquiries as to the state of health of the client or endeavoured in any other quarter to obtain a higher annuity, which from the intemperate habits of the client might in all probability have been procured.

On a bill filed by the heir-at-law of the client to set aside the transaction:—Held: the relation of attorney & client subsisted at the time of the sale & the attorney had failed to show that no industry he was bound to exert would have got a better bargain for his client, & the sale was accordingly set aside.

753. Non-disclosure that solicitor purchaser—Purchase in name of third party.]—A. was the solr. & land agent of B., who was desirous of selling an estate, & in a letter to A. expressed his readiness to sell it for thirteen thousand guineas. The estate consisted of two portions, & a land valuer, whose valuation was not shown to have been communicated by A. to B., put upon the two portions separate values which, added together, exceeded the thirteen thousand guineas. A. sold part of the estate to C. for a sum exceeding the valuer's estimate of that portion, & then purchased the other portion for a sum much less than that stated in the estimate, but which, added to C.'s purchase-money, just made up thirteen thousand guineas. A. pretended that the latter purchase was made by one of his relatives, & the conveyance from B. was executed to that relative, but immediately afterwards a conveyance was executed from the relative to A., & in that conveyance was a recital that the purchase-money was furnished by A. These facts were not discovered till thirty-seven years afterwards, & then B. filed his bill against the representatives of A., who had died seventeen years before, to set aside the latter conveyances, & to have an account:—Held: the circumstances of the transaction were of a fraudulent nature.—CHARTER v. TREVELYAN (1844), 11 Cl. & Fin. 714; 8 Jur. 1015; 8 E. A. was entitled to a reversionary interest in one-fifth share of certain real & personal estate then held by a devisee for life. A. granted to B. an annuity upon it; the annuity deed which was registered contained a power of sale; the annuity fell into arrear, & B. determined to exercise the power of sale. The sale was effected for a sum of £900; but the purchaser discovered an objection in the memorial registered, which rendered the annuity deed invalid, & he refused to complete the purchase, & obtained a return of his deposit-money. The solrs. of B., acting at the time, as they stated, from motives of kindness to A., obtained from A., who had not the benefit of any solr.'s advice, an assignment of the reversionary interest to L. for the sum of £900, & after the reversion fell in by the death of the tenant for life, claimed the property as the purchasers, alleging that the purchase had been made by L. as their agent & on their behalf. The exors. declined to pay them the value of the property, which it was then found amounted to £1,770, but paid it into ct. under Trustee Act, 1847 (c. 96). The solrs. presented a petition to have the money paid out to them as purchasers of the reversionary interest under the deed of assignment to L. A. opposed the payment, on affidavits, which set up a case of deception & fraud practised on him. The parties on both sides agreed that the case should be heard on petition & affidavits as if a petition & cross petition had been filed. The Vice-Chancellor ordered the money to be paid out of ct. to the solrs. as purchasers. The Lord Chancellor, on appeal, reversed this order, declared the assignment to be invalid, & ordered the money to be paid back into ct.; reserved the costs, & gave either of the parties liberty to make any further application to the ct.:—Held: the Lord Chancellor's order was correct; the purchase by the solrs., who were at the time the solrs. of the vendor, was contrary to the rules of equity & void.—LEWIS v. HILLMAN (1852), 3 H. He acted as the only solr. in the matter, & on execution of the instrument, gave her his bill of costs, which she immediately discharged out of the consideration money. On bill filed to set aside the transaction:—Held: this was not strictly a case between solr. & client; & there was no evidence of unfair advantage taken of pltf., & the payment of costs was the payment of a fair charge, & not such a return of part of the purchase-money as would, by reducing the consideration, avoid the annuity under 53 Geo. 3, c. 141.—EDWARDS v. After A.'s death his widow & exors. brought an action to have the lease set aside on the grounds that the lease was not a proper one in that it did not contain any power of re-entry on the part of the lessor on the lessee making default in payment of rent, that C. acted as solr. for both parties in the transaction, & that A. had no independent advice:—Held: at the time of the transaction C. had no personal influence over A., & therefore C. was not acting as

A. was entitled to a reversionary interest in one-fifth share of certain real & personal estate then held by a devisee for life. A. granted to B. an annuity upon it; the annuity deed which was registered contained a power of sale; the annuity fell into arrear, & B. determined to exercise the power of sale. The sale was effected for a sum of £900; but the purchaser discovered an objection in the memorial registered, which rendered the annuity deed invalid, & he refused to complete the purchase, & obtained a return of his deposit-money. The solrs. of B., acting at the time, as they stated, from motives of kindness to A., obtained from A., who had not the benefit of any solr.'s advice, an assignment of the reversionary interest to L. for the sum of £900, & after the reversion fell in by the death of the tenant for life, claimed the property as the purchasers, alleging that the purchase had been made by L. as their agent & on their behalf. The exors. declined to pay them the value of the property, which it was then found amounted to £1,770, but paid it into ct. under Trustee Act, 1847 (c. 96). The solrs. presented a petition to have the money paid out to them as purchasers of the reversionary interest under the deed of assignment to L. A. opposed the payment, on affidavits, which set up a case of deception & fraud practised on him. The parties on both sides agreed that the case should be heard on petition & affidavits as if a petition & cross petition had been filed. Subsequently the mtgor. entered into partnership with S. on the terms that his capital should consist of the business premises & plant, which were to be taken at a valuation. One of the mtgees. acted as solr. in the matter, drew the partnership articles & furnished the valuer with the particulars of the mtgor.'s interest in the business premises, but concealed from S. the existence of the mtge. to which the premises were subject. The mtgor. having become bkpt., his partner S. filed a bill praying for relief against the mtgee.:—Held: the solr. must make good to S. the amount of the mtge. debt & interest with costs; but S. must pay the costs of the co-trustee who was innocent in the matter, & recover them against the solr.—STERRY v. COMBS (1871), 40 L. 764. Purchase of annuity—Solicitor previously unknown to annuitant.—Pltf. being entitled under a will to an annuity of £50 charged upon real estates, & having need of a sum of ready money, applied to deft., a solr., till then unknown to her, to procure her a loan, & after some negotiation with a third person, which failed, the solr. himself purchased a portion of the annuity. He acted as the only solr. in the matter, & on execution of the instrument, gave her his bill of costs, which she immediately discharged out of the consideration money. On bill filed to set aside the transaction:—Held: this was not strictly a case between solr. & client; & there was no evidence of unfair advantage taken of pltf., & the payment of costs was the payment of a fair charge, & not such a return of part of the purchase-money as would, by reducing the consideration, avoid the annuity under 53 Geo. 3, c. 141.—EDWARDS v. After A.'s death his widow & exors. brought an action to have the lease set aside on the grounds that the lease was not a proper one in that it did not contain any power of re-entry on the part of the lessor on the lessee making default in payment of rent, that C. acted as solr. for both parties in the transaction, & that A. had no independent advice:—Held: at the time of the transaction C. had no personal influence over A., & therefore C. was not acting as

W. had two days before the sale taken out a summons to obtain leave for pltf. in the administration suit to attend proceedings in the foreclosure suit, such summons being returnable on the day after the sale. He had never been consulted about the sale, & did not know what was the amount of the reserved bidding:—Held: W. was not disqualified from purchasing, for his client was at liberty to purchase, & therefore his being her solr. did not disqualify him, & the mere fact of his own name appearing on the particulars of sale as a person

782. ———.]—There is no rule that, where an unprofessional person deals as vendor or mtgor. with a solr., he must be separately advised. The onus of proving the equity of the transaction is prima facie on the solr., but the requisite proof may be afforded by the vendor or mtgor. himself or by documentary evidence.—READDY v. PENDERGAST (1886), 55 L. T. 767; varied (1887), 56 L. T. 790, C. A.

783. Security for gross amount in respect of costs—Only valid to extent of actual bill.]—A solr. is not justified in accepting from his client a gross sum as a remuneration for his professional services, in lieu of delivery of bill of costs, without the intervention of a third party, or adopting some other mode of extricating his client from the effect of that pressure which the law assumes while the relation of solr. & client exists between them.

When a mtge. has been executed by a client in favour of his solr., who prepared it, & who had the sole management of his property, for the purpose of securing, amongst other things, the payment of a gross amount instead of the delivery of a bill of costs, & the evidence shows that the solr. took no proper steps to relieve his client from his incapacity to enter into such an agreement, such a mtge. can only stand as a security for the amount to be found due in respect thereof.—*MORGAN v. Power of sale exercisable without notice.]—A solr. advanced money to his client on a second mtge., in which was inserted a power of sale exercisable at any time without the usual proviso requiring that notice should be given, or some interest should be three months in arrear; & it was not shown that he explained to the client that the power was not in the usual form. The solr. afterwards took possession, & for several years received the rents, which, together with some payments made by the mtgor., exceeded the interest on both mortgages. He then sold the property without notice:—Held: the omission from the power of sale of the usual qualifying clause was a breach of duty, & the mtgee. was liable in damages as for an improper sale, unless it could be shown that some interest was three months in arrear.

part of which were subject to six mtges., was threatened with an immediate sale by the third mtgee. of the greater part of it, who had bought in the second mtge., & was in treaty for the purchase of the first.

Deft., a solr., advanced the money needful to pay off the mtgee. & prevent a sale, stipulating that the whole of the mtges. should be paid off, & that he should have a mtge. for the total sum paid by him, including costs of the different mtgees., to bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent., the first & second mtges. having previously been at 5 per cent.

He also stipulated that the mtge. should include a separate property which was in mtge. at 5 per cent., & that he should be entitled to costs as if a client had been mtgee. All these stipulations were distinctly explained to the mtgor., & were carried into effect by the mtge. deed.

In an action for redemption brought by the mtgor.:—Held: as the unusual provisions had been fully explained to the mtgor., they were binding upon him, except that, as to the additional property, which had been included solely for the mtgee.'s own protection, the additional rate of interest must be disallowed.—*JONES v. (c) Exercise of Power of Sale.

794. Solicitor may retain only amount advanced.]—S. having paid off a debt secured by mtge. upon real estates, in the equity of redemption of which his wife was, at the date of their marriage, entitled to a life interest to her separate use, afterwards, without her privity, assigned the mtge. to the solr. of himself & wife, as security for a debt due to such solr. for costs principally incurred in a suit in which he acted, first for the wife before her marriage, & afterwards for both the husband & wife:—Held: such assignment was a valid security as against the wife's life interest in the hereditaments assigned.

The solr., having subsequently purchased from the original mtgee., for £40, a debt for costs, of £175, which the latter would have been entitled to have added to his mtge. debt, was held entitled, as against the wife, to the benefit of such purchase, but to the extent only of securing himself in respect of the debt due to him from the husband.—NELSON v. BOOTH (1857), 27 L. J. Ch. 110; 3 Jur. N. S. 951; 5 W. R. 722.

795. ———.] — The ordinary rule that the ct. will not grant an interlocutory injunction restraining a mtgee. from exercising his power of sale except on the terms of the mtgor. paying into ct. the sum sworn by the mtgee. to be due for principal, interest & costs, does not apply to a case where the mtgee. at the time of taking the mtge. was the solr. of the mtgor. In such a case the ct. will look at all the circumstances of the case, & will make such order as will save the mtgor. from oppression without injuring the security of the mtgee.

Pltf. was a lady who was entitled to a life interest in leasehold property which she had mortgaged to various persons. Deft. acted as her solr. & with her sanction in order to release her from embarrassment bought up several of the incumbrances with his own money & took a transfer of them to himself; having previously taken a mtge. of the life interest to secure his past costs & the costs which he might incur in paying off the incumbrances. Afterwards pltf. discharged deft., & employed another solr., who applied to deft. for information respecting the securities transferred. Deft. refused to give this information unless the payment of what was due to him was guaranteed, & threatened to proceed to a sale of the property. Pltf. then brought an action to impeach the securities & to restrain the sale of the property, & moved for an injunction till the hearing:—Held: considering all the circumstances, an injunction ought to be granted, on pltf. paying into ct. such a sum as the ct. considered would cover the amount actually advanced by deft., & amending the writ so as to make it a simple action for redemption & injunction.—MACLEOD v. JONES (1883), 24 Ch. D. 289; 53 L. J. Ch. 145; 49 L. T. 321; 32 W. R. 43, C. A.

798. ——— Necessity for proof of knowledge of testator.]—An attorney had advanced to a client in humble circumstances the necessary funds to prosecute actions of ejectment, which were conducted by the attorney, & terminated in a compromise, on which the client received a large sum of money. During the proceedings the widow of the client's brother wrote a letter to the client saying that she had little money to spare, but wished to do all she could so that justice might be done to every branch of the family. The attorney wrote an answer to this letter by the client's direction, saying, that if the client succeeded, substantial justice should be done to all to whom the client was related. Neither the brother's widow, nor any of the client's relatives, gave him any assistance in prosecuting the actions. The attorney, by his directions, prepared a will, which the client executed, & under which the attorney took large benefits, but in which benefits were also given to relatives of testator. It did not appear that the letter of the brother's widow, or the answer to it, was referred to in the course of the preparation of the will either by the attorney or the client:—Held: (1) the will was not made under any mistake or misapprehension caused by the attorney; (2) the circumstance of a solr. preparing for a client a will containing dispositions in his own favour, does not of itself take away the right of the solr. to be for his own benefit a devisee or legatee.—HINDSON v. CORNICK (1844), 3 L. T. O. S. 21.

A. & E. prayed probate of the will, without the words giving T. the legacy, & appointing him exor. T. on the contrary, prayed probate for the will as it stood:—Held: the evidence showed that testatrix was aware of the contents & effect of the codicil, & her capacity being unimpeached, the codicil was therefore entitled to probate.

810. — Presumption that will explained to testator.—B., a solr., drew the will of R., his father-in-law, which bequeathed a share of residue amounting to £45,000, to B.'s wife, & appointed B. sole exor. The will contained no direction that this sum should be for the separate use of B.'s wife. There was no evidence as to what had passed between B. & R. at the time of the execution of the will:—Held: in the absence of evidence, the ct. could not assume such a dereliction of duty on B.'s part, in not informing R. of the effect of the will, as to make B. a trustee for his wife.—*Re BIRCHALL, WILSON v. 812. Duty to keep strict accounts of moneys received.]—L. acted as solr. for N. in various matters, & particularly in raising money for him on mtges. & bills of exchange. He also acted as receiver of N.'s rents. The course as to the transactions for raising money appeared to have been, that on each occasion L. received the money, retained out of it a sum agreed upon for his costs of that transaction, & handed over the balance. The rents which he received were all duly accounted for, & accounts settled, not including any items for costs. After the death of the solr. a large bill of costs was sent in, which was referred for taxation. The taxing master required a cash account, but no sufficient materials existed for making it out, & the taxing master certified that nothing was due to the solr., inasmuch as he had received large sums of money, of his disposal of which no account was furnished:—Held: the bill of costs as taxed must be paid, for the principle of White v. Lincoln (Lady), Newcastle (Duke) v. Kinderley (1803), 8 Ves. 363, did not apply where the solr. was not the general agent of the client, so as to be able to receive the client's moneys at all times without his knowledge, but only received money for him in respect of separate transactions of which the client was aware at the time, & knew what was to be received.

Though it is very reprehensible in a solr. not to keep strict accounts of all moneys received by him for his client, yet the omission to do so is not a reason why he should be deprived of his costs altogether.—Re LEE, Ex p. NEVILLE (1868), 4 Ch. App. 43; 19 L. T. 435; 17 W. R. 108, L. JJ. Annotation:—Refd. Cheese v. Keen, [1908] 1 Ch. 245.

813. — Not to allow unauthorised payments out.]—A., pltf. assocn., was formed to amalgamate a number of firms & cos. controlled by F., & money was obtained by a debenture issue to the public for the purposes of working capital. Pltfs. alleged, & the ct. found (a) that F. drew a number of cheques on the accounts of the constituent firms & cos., the property of pltfs., payable to T. & C., his solrs., who were also solrs. to pltf. assocn., & having paid them to his own account with T. & C., subsequently drew on these moneys for his own purposes; & (b) that F. drew for his own purposes on moneys standing to the credit of pltf. assocn. in the books of T. & C. In an action against T., who was at the material time the senior partner of T. & C. & a director of pltf. assocn., damages were claimed for conversion, breach of duty, & negligence. It was not alleged that T. had misappropriated these moneys which had passed through the books of his firm or had converted them to his own use. It was alleged that he had knowledge by himself or his partner of what had occurred & that he was liable as a director of, & solr. to, pltf. assocn. & as holding money for pltf. assocn. F. had assigned his estate for the benefit of his creditors, & pltf. assocn. had sent in a proof against his estate for all the moneys in respect of which a claim was made against T. in this action. It was contended (inter alia) for deft. that by doing so pltf. assocn. had affirmed & ratified the acts by which F. had obtained these moneys, which were the acts complained of, against deft. T., & that this was a defence to the action:—Held: (1) on the claim against T. as a member of a firm of solrs. in respect of the second group of transactions as to moneys credited to pltfs. in the firm's books T. was liable, as where solrs. kept an account of a client, in this case A., they were under a duty as solrs. to use proper diligence & proper skill to see that sums were not improperly paid out of that account to the debit of the client; (2) as to the first group of transactions where F. had paid moneys of the constituent cos. into & out of the accounts of the firm of solrs., these T. must account for, unless F. was authorised to make these payments in fact or by general acquiescence or by holding out. His Lordship found that F. was not so authorised.—FENTON TEXTILE ASSOCN., LTD. v. THOMAS & CLARK (1928), 45 T. L. R. 113.

814. Re-opening settled accounts—As to specific items impeached.]—Account between attorney & client, although long since settled & signed, will not be considered conclusive as against the latter; & if any items of charge can be impeached, the accounts will be so far re-opened by the ct., on a bill filed for that purpose, as that pltf. will be allowed to surcharge & falsify. A case made out by the suit, will entitle pltf. to an issue at law to try the fairness of the impugned charges, although founded on bonds set up; & if he succeed in the issue, the ct. will proceed with the investigation by reference to the master. A bond given by a client to his attorney, for the difference between a sum received by the latter, as a composition for a debt due to him from a debtor of both of them, for the purpose of indemnifying the attorney from loss by the transaction in having signed the general composition deed, held to be impeached by establishing that fact, & the amount intended to be secured by it falsified thereby, & disallowed by the master on the reference to him of the charges set up by the accounts, & confirmed by the ct. on exceptions to his report. The ct. on such a suit, will not re-open or disturb settled accounts, further than as to the particular charges that can be impeached.—JOHNS v. LLOYD, SMITH v. LLOYD (1822), 10 Price, 62; 147 E. 820. Large payments on both sides—Method of taking accounts.]—A solr. had a great number of money dealings with a client in addition to usual legal business. From time to time prior to 1825 they settled their accounts, but there was no regular or understood time for such settlement. From 1825 to 1846, when the solr. died, the client placed considerable sums in the hands of the solr., who gave his bond for one sum & promissory notes for others. He also paid the client, as he was asked to do so, gross sums without any arrangement as to their appropriation. Upon a bill filed against the exors. of the solr. for an account:—Held: in taking the account, regard being had to the course of dealing previous to 1825, when the account began, no balance was to be struck until the end of the account; & every payment on either side was to bear simple interest from the time when it was made, except where there had been an obvious appropriation.—*NAPPER v. The cases . . . appear to establish, in general, that he is liable for the consequences of ignorance or non-observance of the rules of practice of this ct.; for the want of care in the preparation of the cause for trial; or of attendance thereon with his witnesses: & for the mismanagement of so much of the conduct of a cause as is usually & ordinarily allotted to his department of the profession. 869. Duty to investigate cause of action.]—Preparatory to commencing an action, it is the duty of an attorney to inform himself correctly of the nature of his client's demand, & of the proof which can be adduced in its support. Thus, in an action brought by an attorney against his client for the costs of a writ & subsequent proceedings, which had apparently been abandoned for want of evidence, & the jury had found a verdict for the amount of the costs; on the argument upon a rule nisi obtained for entering a nonsuit on grounds reserved at the trial, but which grounds failed on such argument, it appeared, from the judge's notes at the trial, that the attorney received his instructions through the medium of a third party, a collector of debts, & without any personal interview with deft., who had, through such third party, forwarded a written retainer & authority to the attorney:—Held: in the exercise of their duty for the protection of suitors, they were called upon to interpose between the attorney & his client, & suggested a stet processus, or, at the attorney's option, a reference to the master to report whether proper inquiries had been made by him before action brought, with a condition annexed for payment of all costs by him, if the report should be in the negative; or, failing the attorney's concurrence in either of those proposals, a new trial to be had between the parties.—*GILL v. The attorney thereupon brought the action in the names of O. & A., & discovering afterwards, when the bills were for the first time shown to him, that there was no special indorsement to O. & A., as required by the law of France, he discontinued, & brought another action in the names of C. L. & co.:—Held: the suing in the names of O. & A. without having first ascertained that they were in a position to maintain an action on the bills, was such gross negligence as to disable the attorney from recovering the costs of the abortive action.—*LONG v. Where, therefore, masters employed an attorney to take proceedings against their apprentices for misconduct, & the attorney specifically proceeded on the sect. of the statute which related to servants & not to apprentices:—Held: this was an instance of such want of skill or diligence as to render the attorney liable to repay to his clients the damages & costs occasioned by his error.

877. — Defective indictment.]—Pltf., an attorney, undertook a prosecution for perjury on deft.'s behalf, & agreed not to charge him full costs, except money out of pocket. He disbursed £105 towards carrying on the proceedings, but, by negligence, preferred a defective indictment, & in consequence, the prosecution failed:—Held: he could not recover against deft. for the disbursements.—LEWIS v. SAMUEL (1846), 8 Q. B. 685; 1 New Pract. Cas. 424; 15 L. J. Q. B. 218; 7 L. T. O. S. 60; 10 Jur. 429; 115 E. R. 1031.

878. — Advising wrong remedy.]—The taxing master has, under Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), a discretion to disallow costs he may think unduly claimed.

The disallowance of the whole costs of an action of replevin, where replevin was clearly the wrong remedy, is a proper exercise of that discretion.

An attorney is clearly responsible, unless acting on the opinion of counsel.—Re CLARK (1851), 1 De G. M. & G. 43; 21 L. J. Ch. 20; 18 L. T. O. S. 130; 15 Jur. 1047; 42 E. R. 467, L. JJ.

879. — Instituting action where success doubtful—Through own fault.]—It is not negligence in an attorney to institute an action on a contract, in the preparation & carrying out of which he has himself been concerned; & as to which, even through an act or default of his own in carrying it out, it is doubtful, in law, whether his client can recover; & he does not in fact recover. Thus, where an attorney, on the part of his client, an execution creditor, had effected an arrangement with a third party to release him, on such party undertaking that debtor should give certain bills, & execute a warrant of attorney to secure their payment; the undertaking to be void if the bills, etc., were not sent to the guarantor by a certain time; the attorney sent notes instead of bills; & guarantor sent them to debtor, & debtor signed them, but declined to execute the warrant of attorney; creditor suing on the guarantee having averred in his declaration the giving of the notes as performance; & the declaration having been deemed bad on demurrer; in an action by creditor against the attorney for negligence in not sending bills; whereby the guarantor was discharged, the debt lost, & the costs of the former action thrown away:—Held: the suing on the guarantee was not per se evidence of negligence; but the sending notes instead of bills was negligence, for which the attorney was answerable; because though there might be no substantial difference between bills & notes in such a case, it raised a doubt, & involved his client in difficulty, which might have been avoided.—LEVY v. SPYERS (1856), 1 F. & F. 3, N. P.; subsequent proceedings, 1 F. & F. 5, n.

880. — Failure to apply for order of reference—Action on money bond.]—After the issuing of a writ in an action on a common money bond, debt. wrote, stating that he had paid a part & could prove this, & that he was ready to pay the rest. The attorney for claimant did not apply for an order of reference under C. L. P. Act, 1854 (c. 125), s. 3, but delivered a declaration, to which debt. pleaded payment. When the cause, after a considerable lapse of time, was in the paper for trial, a judge's order was obtained by consent to refer the matter to the master to take the account; & he made his allocatur in favour of the pltf. for debt & costs. After the letter was written, & before the allocatur was made, debt. became bkpt. In an action brought by the attorney for pltf., against pltf., on his bill, & in a cross action for negligence, the attorney admitted in evidence that the sect. did not occur to his mind on reading the letter, & that he could not say that the sect. ever came to his memory:—Held: there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the attorney in not applying for an order under the sect.; for that it could not fairly be said that it would have clearly appeared to any reasonable person that the matter in dispute consisted either wholly or in part of matters of mere account which could not conveniently be tried by a jury.—CHAPMAN v. VAN TOLL, VAN TOLL v. CHAPMAN (1857), 8 E. & B. 396; 27 L. J. Q. B. 1; 30 L. T. O. S. 116; 3 Jur. N. S. 1126; 6 W. R. 17; 120 E. R. 148.

881. — Advising client not to defend action.]—In an action against an attorney, the declaration alleging that pltf.'s wife had filed a petition against him in the Divorce Ct. for a judicial separation on the ground of cruelty; that he had employed debt. as his attorney in the suit, & that he had a good defence in it; but was willing to consent to a decree for a judicial separation, provided that if he did so no evidence upon the charges contained in the petition should be taken; & that debt., knowing the premises, negligently advised him not to defend the suit, & induced him to give such consent, & not to attend the hearing with any evidence in support of his defence; but that evidence was taken whereby, it being unanswered, his character had been greatly injured; debt., pleading not guilty, a traverse of his knowledge of the premises alleged, & a traverse that pltf. had a good defence to the suit, pltf.'s case being that he was induced not to defend, on the assurance that evidence would not be taken:—Held: he could not complain of the advice given, unless it was given upon that specific ground, which it was not disputed would have involved gross ignorance on the part of debt., & even had his case been that the advice itself was wrong, semble, the action could not have been sustained, if the evidence showed that it was given honestly, & in the full & reasonable belief that the defence could not be sustained upon the facts.—HILL v. FINNEY (1865), 4 F. & F. 616, N. P. Annotation:—Refd. Davies v. Hood (1903), 19 T. L. R. 158.

882. — Failure to register lis pendens.]—In an action against a solr. for negligence, the declaration stated that pltf. was equitably interested in four-tenth parts of the lease of a colliery, that the lessee had entered into negotiations for the sale of the lease to a co., & that pltf. retained debt., as solr., to file a bill in Chancery against the lessee & the co. for the purpose of enforcing the pltf.'s claim in respect of his shares, & praying that the lessee might convey & secure to pltf. four-tenths of the purchase-money, & that the co. might be decreed to do all things necessary to confirm such conveyance & security & might be enjoined from paying pltf.'s proportion of the purchase-money to the lessee. Breach, that debt. did not register the bill as a lis pendens according to Judgments Act, 1839 (c. 11), s. 7, whereby the lessee was enabled to dispose of the lease to another co. & to receive the purchase-money, & pltf. was deprived of his share in it:—Held: the declaration was good, as the bill in Chancery which prayed for an equitable lien against the intended purchasers of the lease was a lis pendens, which ought to have been registered under the statute, & having regard to the terms of the bill it was the duty of debt. as a solr. to have registered it, without any express request on the part of pltf.—PLANT v. PEARMAN (1872), 41 L. J. Q. B. 169; 26 L. T. 313; 20 W. R. 314.

887. ———.]—An attorney received instructions to sue forty-five underwriters for particular average loss on certain policies on goods which had been shipped to Calcutta, & there sold. Having written ineffectually to each of them, demanding payment, he, under an impression that the only defence to be set up was a supposed set-off against the broker in whose name the policies were effected, sued out writs in the Lord Mayor's Ct., though he knew that that ct. had no power to issue a commission for the examination of witnesses abroad. The actions, after consolidation, being defended, & a commission to examine witnesses at Calcutta being found necessary, the proceedings in the Lord Mayor's Ct. were necessarily abandoned:—Held: the attorney was guilty of crassa negligentia, & disentitled to sue his client for the costs of such abortive proceedings, & it was no answer for him to say, upon the argument of a rule to set aside a verdict which had been found against him, that the difficulty might have been got over by the removal of the causes by certiorari to one of the superior cts.—COX v. LEECH (1857), 1 C. B. N. S. 617; 26 L. J. C. P. 125; 28 L. T. O. S. 370; 3 Jur. N. S. 442; 5 W. R. 199; 140 E. R. 254.

888. ——— Suing in High Court—Where action maintainable in county court.]—Though, when an attorney is employed to recover a small debt, he is liable to his client for unnecessarily & improperly suing in a superior ct., unless, with a knowledge of the consequences, his client instructs him so to do, yet his liability will depend upon whether, from his client's instructions to him, he might reasonably suppose that he would recover, & desired to sue for, a sum which would carry costs; or that from the circumstances & the nature of the question, a judge would certify for costs, & if he might reasonably so have supposed he will not be liable, even though his client, failing to recover in the superior ct., became subject to the costs of suit in that ct.

An attorney is only bound to use reasonable care (WIGHTMAN, J.).—LEE v. DIXON (1863), 3 F. & F. 744, N. P.; subsequent proceedings, 3 F. & F. 749, n.

889. ———.]—Pltf., who was acting as solr. for defts., was instructed by them to commence proceedings against the owner of certain premises to recover the amount due from him as the frontager in respect of the expense of repairing a road upon which his premises abutted. The proceedings might have been instituted in the county ct., but pltf. commenced them in the Ch. Ct. of the County Palatine of Lancaster. The action was dismissed by the Vice-Chancellor, & the present defts. refused to pay pltf.'s costs upon the ground that he had been guilty of negligence in not commencing the action in the county ct.:—Held: as the Vice-Chancellor of the County Palatine had no jurisdiction to inflict any penalty as to costs upon a pltf. for bringing in the County Palatine Ct. an action which might have been brought in the county ct., pltf. had not been guilty of actionable negligence in not advising that the proceedings should be commenced in the county ct.—*BARKER v. iii. Acting out of Time.

890. Whether amounts to negligence—Failure to move to vacate irregular order.]—A., a complainant in chancery, employed B. as his solr., during whose employment an irregular order to dismiss the bill on a certain day, unless publication passed, was obtained; before that day arrived C. was appointed the solr. of A., & the bill having been dismissed because no step was taken by C., an action was commenced against him for negligence, which was held to be maintainable, because he should have conformed with the order, or should within the time have moved to vacate it.—FRANKLAND v. COLE (1832), 2 Cr. & J. 590; 1 L. J. Ex. 189; 149 E. R. 248.

891. ——— Action against local or public authority.]—In an action against attorneys for negligence it appeared that pltf. employed defts. to conduct an action for him against a surveyor of turnpike roads, for alleged trespasses. The surveyor had seized & impounded pltf.'s sheep, as having been found straying on the road: pltf. regained possession of them, by promising the pound keeper to pay the proper charges, & drove them home; on the same day the surveyor retook the sheep in pltf.'s field, & again impounded them. The first & second taking were in Surrey, but on an intermediate day the sheep had escaped & been impounded in Sussex. Turnpike Act, 1823 (c. 95), s. 75, only authorises surveyors to impound sheep found on a turnpike road. Turnpike Roads Act, 1822 (c. 126), s. 147, incorporated in the above statute by reference, requires that actions against any person for anything done in pursuance of the Act, shall be commenced within three months, & the venue laid in the county where the cause of action arose. The attorneys commenced the action within three months, & had a declaration drawn by counsel, who returned it with an observation indorsed, that it would have been prudent to join two other parties. The attorneys thereupon, with pltf.'s assent, discontinued the action & brought another after the expiration of the three months laying the venue in Sussex. The declaration was settled by counsel & the case afterwards submitted to a special pleader who gave as his opinion, that the protecting clause of Turnpike Roads Act, 1822 (c. 126), did not apply to the trespass in seizing the sheep in pltf.'s field. Pltf. went to trial & was nonsuited on account of the action being out of time & the venue improper, with leave to move which was done without success:—Held: (1) this was not a case of actionable negligence in the attorneys; (2) at all events, there was so much doubt on this point, that the attorneys, if mistaken upon it, were not therefore culpably negligent.—KEMP v. BURT (1833), 4 B. & Ad. 424; 1 Nev. & M. K. B. 262; 2 L. J. K. B. 69; 110 E. R. 515.

defts.' plea upon the record, in consequence of which omission a verdict given for pltf. is subsequently set aside; these are such instances of negligence as will afford a good defence to an action brought for the recovery of his bill of costs.—ANON. (1845), 4 L. T. O. S. 454.

893. ———.]—Pltf. had been retained by deft. to bring an action for a false imprisonment against a constable & a person who had acted as a magistrate. The action was brought against the constable only, & not within the time limited by the statute. The constable pleaded not guilty, by statute, but the record was made up without the words "by statute" being inserted in the margin. The then pltf. in consequence obtained a verdict at the trial, but which was subsequently set aside by the ct., as it appeared that the plea had contained the words "by statute" in the margin. Pltf.'s attorney, the now pltf., had thereupon consented to a nonsuit, & a moiety of the costs had been levied upon the now deft.

894. ——— Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (c. 61).]—A solr. instructed by a client to make a claim against a corpn. for a neglect or default in the execution of a public duty or authority is bound to know the provisions of above Act, s. 1, & to bear them in mind at all material times, & to inform his client if the period is running out during which an action may be commenced. If he loses sight, & allows his client to lose sight, of the provisions of that sect. so that the claim is barred, the solr. is guilty of negligence.—FLETCHER & SON v. JUBB, BOOTH & HELLIWELL, [1920] 1 K. B. 275; 89 L. J. K. B. 236; 122 L. T. 258; 36 T. L. R. 19, C. A.

It was the duty of pltf's. to have been present in ct., either in person or by their clerk, to marshal the witnesses, & answer the questions of counsel. Breach, that, although deft. received the damages, & pltf. paid to him, as such attorney as aforesaid, his costs of prosecuting the action, he did not pay over to B. or pltf., the residue of the damages:—Held: this declaration was bad, on special demurrer, for not showing distinctly that the money was received by deft., under his original retainer by pltf., in the action against L.—*BEVINS v. If told at the time when retained, that his client has no money for costs, he cannot demand payment of costs incurred before issuing execution; nor, it should seem, in any case, can he demand more than the costs of issuing execution. But to maintain an action for negligence against him, for his not issuing execution, he deeming it not desirable to do so, there must be some evidence that it was desirable or for the benefit of pltf. to do so: as that he did not make due inquiries that debtor could pay, etc. In such a case the

947. — Composition deed.]—A debtor entered into a compromise with certain creditors, among whom was his solr., who called the meeting of creditors, attended the same, & prepared the deed of composition. The creditors, & among them the solr., executed the deed. In the deed was contained a covenant by debtor to assure his life forthwith, & keep it assured during three consecutive years for £1,500, a sum equal to which was covenanted by debtor to be paid to the trustees for division among the creditors, by monthly payments, or otherwise as the trustees might require. It was also provided, that, if debtor should fail in any payment covenanted to be made, or in assuring or keeping assured his life according to his covenant the deed should be void. There was a private agreement between debtor & the solr., that, notwithstanding the deed, the latter should be paid his debt in full. Debtor did not assure his life till a year after the deed, when he paid £500, the amount covenanted to be paid within that period, & assured his life for £1,000, all that was then due. The policy was deposited with one of the trustees. Two other instalments were subsequently paid to the trustees, according to the terms of the deed. The solr. subsequently brought an action against debtor for his whole demand. On a bill, filed by debtor, for an injunction to stay all proceedings in the action:—Held: it was the duty of the solr. to explain to debtor, or to ascertain whether he understood the legal & equitable obligations imposed by the deed, & the solr. would not be allowed, in a ct. of justice, to say, that he had believed that an assurance for £1,500 had been effected.—*WATTS v. 959. — Negligence causing rectification.]—Pltf., a widow with children, being possessed of property left by her first husband, married, & marriage articles were prepared upon instructions given by the intended husband the night before the marriage, by which the wife's property was limited in the first instance to him for life. The bill was filed by the wife to rectify the settlement against the husband & the solr. who prepared the settlement. The Vice-Chancellor held that upon the evidence, the limitations were contrary to the intention of pltf., & that the husband, having undertaken as agent for the wife to have a settlement prepared, was bound to have such a contract prepared as the ct. would sanction, & such contract would give the wife the first life estate in her own property. A decree was therefore made to rectify the settlement. The husband, & the solr. who prepared the settlement, who in the view of the Vice-Chancellor had failed in his professional duty, & had by his neglect & misconduct caused the litigation, were ordered to pay the costs of the suit:—Held: as he had not been guilty of participation in a fraud, but at most only of a blunder for which the remedy was an action for professional negligence, there was no jurisdiction to order him to pay the costs of the suit.—*CLARK v. 961. Liability for acting on information given by client.]—A solr. was consulted by a lessee of premises with reference to the building of a wall, to the erection of which on the demised premises his lessor objected. The lease was shown to the solr. The solr. made no inquiries as to whether there was any objection to building the wall, other than what might be contained in the lease. The land was subject to a restrictive covenant against any such erection in favour of the original vendors of the freehold, & the wall, after erection, had to be pulled down:—Held: the solr. had been guilty of no negligence.—*PITMAN v. 962. Failure to give notice of appointment of new trustees—New trustees of settlement of reversionary interest—Notice to original trustees of fund.]—In order to perfect the title of an assignee of an equitable interest in trust funds notice of the assignment must be given to the trustees of those funds. Therefore, if new trustees have been appointed in a settlement of a reversionary interest of funds bequeathed in trust under a will, & the person who has acted as solr. to the new trustees from the date of their appointment fails to give notice of the appointment to the trustees of the will, & loss is thereby caused to the settlement fund, the solr. is liable to an action of negligence at the suit of the new trustees. In such a case the right of action arises from a breach of contract, & therefore, Stat. Limitations runs in favour of deft. from the date of the breach of duty, i.e. from the time when the notice should have been given.—BEAN v. WADE (1885), 2 T. L. R. 157, C. A.

An attorney is only liable for crassa negligentia; & it is impossible to impute that to deft. for not discovering a defect in the memorial of an annuity which was subsequently held to be a defect upon a very doubtful construction of the statute.—*BAIKIE v. 967. ——— Persuasion of client.]—The extrix. of an attorney is liable in case for the negligence of her testator, in not making due inquiry into the validity of a security upon which his client proposes to advance money. It seems, however, that the duty of an attorney is not so strict, but that if he is lulled by the assurance of his client into a persuasion that the security is good, so as to abate his vigilance in the inquiry into its validity, his liability for negligence is discharged.

They should be strong facts which are held sufficient to absolve an attorney from those duties & liabilities which the law imposes on him, & the benefit of which it is the very object of his employer to secure (ABBOTT, C.J.).—*WILSON v. The shares were allotted to H., but the contract for the sale of the business was not registered. Three months later, upon the marriage of Dr. & Mrs. F., H. deposited with N. & two other persons, the trustees of the marriage settlement, the certificates for fully paid-up shares, being shares received by H. for the sale of his business, to secure a debt due to Mrs. F. The certificates stated that the shares were fully paid up. In 1885 the shares were transferred into the names of the trustees. 978. Breach, that deft. did not use due care & diligence in that behalf, but wholly neglected so to do, & on the contrary falsely represented to pltf., that the warrant of attorney & mtges. would be a sufficient security for the repayment of the £3,000 with interest, whereupon pltf. lent the £3,000 to B.; that they were not a sufficient security, by reason whereof pltf. had wholly lost the interest due & payable on the said sum of £3,000 amounting to a large sum, to wit, the sum of £1,000 & was likely wholly to lose the said principal sum of £3,000. At the trial it appeared, that in the year 1814 deft. had been retained by pltf. to ascertain whether the warrant of attorney & mortgages were a sufficient security for the £3,000 & interest, & that at that time he represented they were so. In the year 1820, the interest to that time having been regularly paid, it was discovered that the warrant of attorney & mtges. were not a sufficient security:—Held: the misconduct or negligence of the attorney constituted the cause of action.—HOWELL v.

In a mtge. transaction in which the same firm of solrs. acted for both parties, but in which the mtgees., who were trustees, acted on their own responsibility, with full knowledge of the value of the security, a member of the firm received the money intended to be advanced, which he paid into the firm's banking account. Two days later he presented a cheque of his firm to the same amount at a bank at which the title deeds were deposited as security for the mtgors.' overdraft, & received the deeds. The security having proved insufficient, it was sought to make the solr., who was then the sole surviving member of his firm, responsible, on the ground that he had advised the mtge., & that the money had passed through his firm's bank:—Held: the trustees having acted on their responsibility, the solrs. were not responsible; & the fact of the solr. being employed as agent, & the money having been paid through his firm, did not make him liable to make up the deficiency.—BRINDEN v. 988. Failure to give notice to secure priority.]—

A law agent employed to prepare an heritable bond stated the manner of holding in this way: the grantor was taken bound "to infest & seize the said H. & his foresaids, on our own expenses, in the lands, & others above disposed, to be holden from me, of & under my immediate lawful superiors thereof, in the same manner as I hold the same myself, & for payment of the same feu duties as I pay or am bound to pay therefor."

The agent neglected to procure confirmation from the superior, in consequence of which his employer, the grantee, lost his money:—Held: this was a public holding, & invalid for want of confirmation; & the agent, having chosen to depart from the usual practice of introducing the double manner of holding, & having neglected to procure confirmation, was bound to make good the loss.

We see no reason for imputing want of skill or negligence to deft. in his character of an attorney in taking a mtge. without a power of sale, or for not suspecting that a claim would arise to part of the land founded on a deed that had been kept secret, & of which there was no trace in the title of the mtgor. as shown to deft. when the deeds disclosed a valid one (COLERIDGE, J.).—BAILEY v. the purchase of certain leasehold property under certain conditions of sale, one of which was, that the purchaser should take an underlease "according to the draft underlease already prepared, which will be produced at the time of sale, & may in the meantime be inspected at the office of H.; but no abstract of the vendor's title thereto shall be required, nor the lessor's title objected to or gone into." It subsequently appeared that the premises had been previously mortgaged, pltf. was turned out of possession by the mtgee. — Held: this amounted to negligence on the part of the attorney sufficient to maintain an action against his estate, & pltf. was entitled to recover, in addition to the amount he had paid to obtain a good title, interest on same during the time he held possession, as he had been obliged to pay the mtgee. mesne profits during that period. — *ALLEN v. 1002. — — — Case incorrectly laid before counsel.] — An attorney for a vendee received an abstract of the vendor's title, containing sixty-five sheets. He assumed, that a party named in it had an estate in fee, & then laid a part of that abstract, containing eight sheets, before a counsel, who advised that the vendor could make a good title. It appeared that that party was not seized in fee, in consequence of a person, who was only an equitable tenant in tail, having suffered a recovery without the concurrence of the legal tenant for life. The jury found a verdict against the attorney: — Held: there was evidence enough to warrant that verdict. — IRESON v. PEARMAN (1825), 3 B. & C. 799; 5 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 687; 3 L. J. O. S. K. 1009. — — — Fine.] — On a contract for the sale of part of an estate, the purchaser requiring a fine to be levied of it for the purpose of removing admitted defects in the title, the vendor employed an attorney, who was his relation, & had been professionally employed by him on previous occasions, to levy the fine & complete the contract. The attorney advised the levying of a fine of the whole of the vendor's estate, without telling him the effect of it; such fine was accordingly levied, & the vendor died without declaring its uses, & without re-publishing his will, previously made, by which he had devised the whole estate to his wife, who survived him. After the vendor's death the attorney claimed the estate as his heir-at-law, alleging that the will was revoked by the fine, & he brought actions of ejectment to recover possession thereof. The widow filed a bill in Chancery for relief; & on an issue directed by that ct., a jury found that the attorney fraudulently omitted to tell the vendor what effect the fine would have upon a devise of the property comprised in it. The Ct. of Ch., upon that verdict, decreed the attorney to be a trustee for the devisee of the lands & hereditaments which so descended to him as heir-at-law. The House of Lords, affirming that decree, further held, that the attorney's alleged ignorance of the effect of a fine on a will of the lands comprised in it, & his omission to inquire whether the conusor, his client, had made a will, were such professional ignorance & neglect as afforded a principle by which a ct. of equity might, independent of the ground of fraud, hold him to be a trustee for a third person, of any benefit resulting to himself from his professional ignorance or neglect, to the prejudice of that person. — *BULKLEY v. 1010. Agreement for sale—Duty to prepare agreement in writing.] — A. verbally agreed with B., his solr., for the sale of land to B. This agreement, which was never reduced to writing, provided that B. should bear all expenses of making out the title, that possession should be at once given, & that the purchase-money should be paid at a fixed future date with interest in the meantime. B. entered into possession, but took no further steps in completion of the purchase, & before the purchase-money became due, died. In a suit by A. for specific performance against the exor. of B.: — Held: B., as A.'s solr., ought to have had an agreement in writing prepared & the exor. was bound to complete the purchase & pay the costs of the suit. — BRAFIELD v. SCRIVEN (1873), 22 W. R. 202.

1011. Sale without regard to existing settlement—Sufficiency of notice of settlement.] — A settlement of land in Wales, the property of the husband, was executed shortly after a marriage, which took place in India. The husband & wife went to reside in Wales, & the husband employed a solr. there to make his will & to sell part of the land, the solr., concluding from the statement of the husband that there had not been any marriage settlement. The husband died leaving his widow trustee & extrix., & directing his debts to be paid out of his estate. The widow employed the same solr. to sell other part of the land, & the solr. received the purchase-moneys & applied them in payment of the debts of the husband. The deed of settlement had been in the possession of the wife, but had been by her given to the husband. There was no evidence as to what had become of it, but after the sales had been made a copy was found. The solr. had concluded from what he was told by the husband that there had been no settlement, & though, before all the sales were completed, his clerk had been told by the wife that there had been a settlement, the solr. continued to believe that there had been none. An action was brought by the children of the marriage, entitled under the settlement, claiming to recover from the solr. the money which had so passed through his hands:—Held: under the circumstances, although the solr. might have been negligent in that character, he could not be held to have had such notice of the settlement as to be treated as constructively a trustee, & therefore liable for the money which had passed through his hands.—WILLIAMS v. WILLIAMS (1881), 17 Ch. D. 437; 44 L. T. 573.

1012. — Liability for erroneous clauses.—Statement of amount of tithe rentcharge.—Defts., solrs., drew up an agreement for sale of land dated July 15, 1926, in which a tithe rentcharge of £8 9s. was stipulated. On July 7, 1926, the vendor received a demand note for a tithe rent of £10 17s. 9d. Defts. were not aware of this when the agreement was drawn up; the purchaser deducted the sum of £74 2s. 10d. from the purchase-money as a result of this increased tithe, & the vendor, pltf., claimed damages for negligence from deft. solrs.:—Held: defts. had not acted negligently in any way.—*ELLIS v. 1032. — — Answer to casual inquiry.]—An attorney is not liable to an action for negligence at the suit of one between whom & himself the relation of attorney & client does not exist, for giving, in answer to a casual inquiry erroneous information as to the contents of a deed.

A., B., & C. were employed in a manufacture in which secrecy was essential; & to insure their fidelity, they were required to execute deeds under which a portion of their wages was to be invested in the name of a trustee, with a stipulation for determining the engagement on giving two months' notice, at the expiration of which, in the cases of B. & C., the money so invested was to be paid over to them, but, in the case of A., the deed was so framed as to make it payable only to his exors. upon his death. D., the attorney for the employers, being upon the premises, was asked by A. if he would receive his money if he gave notice to quit the service; whereupon D., not recollecting that A.'s deed differed in this respect from those of B. & C., though he himself drew them all, & had them in his custody, answered in the affirmative. & after her death to her children, & on both occasions the trustees in the petitions stated that the office of N., their solr., was to be the place for the service of any notice in reference to the funds. A year after the transfer of the Consols a petition was presented by M., by her next friend, a solr., & by the trustees, for the purpose of dealing with the Consols, & the solrs. on the record for petitioners were the firm of whom N. was a member, & the office of N. was to be the place where any notice was to be served relating to the trust fund. The petition set forth what had been done in respect of the Consols & other matters. An order was made in reference to the Consols, & dividends; but in drawing it up an error occurred by including in it the whole of the fund standing to the credit of the account, & the future dividends were, as ordered paid to M. during her life.

D. had suffered loss by payments wrongly made to M., now deceased, & she, on attaining majority, presented a petition asking that the estate of M. might be made primarily liable for the loss which she had suffered, & that N. might be made liable for any deficiency:—Held: N. as officer of the ct., had been guilty of negligence in not seeing that all the facts relating to the funds were brought before the ct. when the order was made, & he must, after D. had exhausted the estate of M., make good any deficiency.—Re DANGAR'S TRUSTS (1889), 41 Ch. 1037. —.—.]—If an attorney, conducting a suit, commits an act of negligence by which all the previous steps became useless in the result, he cannot recover for any part of the business done.

Whether or not, in such a case, the work became wholly useless by pltf.'s fault is a question for the jury.—BRACEY v. CARTER (1840), 12 Ad. & El. 373; 113 E. R. 853.

1038. —.—.]—The issue in a case was, whether an attorney had been guilty of negligence; the judge left it to the jury upon all the facts of the case, to say, whether there was negligence or not. On moving for a rule for a new trial, it was insisted that the judge should have found the facts, & left it to the jury to say, whether those facts amounted to negligence:—Held: there was no misdirection.—HALES v. PADDOCK (1843), 7 J. P. 290.

1039. —.—.]—Declaration stated that pltf. employed deft. as attorney to sue H., for the recovery of a sum of money; & thereupon it was the duty of deft. to use proper care in conducting the suit; yet deft. did not use proper care, in this, that, having as such attorney sued out writs for the recovery of the money & for the purpose of saving Stat. Limitations he did not upon H., not being found so as to be served with such writs, "duly file" the writs with the proper officer according to the necessary & accustomed practice of the Ct. of Q. B.; whereby the action was barred by the statute:—Held: (1) under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 39, s. 10, which enacts, that to save Stat. Limitations every writ issued in continuation of a preceding writ shall be "returned non est investus & entered of record" within one month after its expiration; although 2 & 3 Will. 4 did not in terms require such writs to be "filed" yet the word "file" in the declaration might have the sense of bringing the writs to the office & in that sense would be included in the word "returned" in the statute, & such filing would therefore be a necessary part of the practice in saving Stat. Limitations & a part of the attorney's duty; (2) the question of negligence in not complying with the practice of the ct. was a question of fact for the jury, under the judge's direction as to the law.—*HUNTER v. This was done with the knowledge & approval of J., a solr., who represented one of the trustees in the matter. The charge was never registered. J. subsequently took a mtge. of the same property & registered it, & he claimed priority over the bank. The bank, being satisfied with the personal security of the trustees, did not contest the claim:—Held: J. was guilty of actual fraud in taking advantage of a defect in the bank's security to defeat the interests of his client.—*BATTISON v. Acting as the representative of the firm he induced her to give him instructions to sell the cottages & to call in the mtge. money, & for that purpose to give him her deeds, for which he gave a receipt in the firm's name; & also to sign two documents, which were neither read over nor explained to her, & which she believed she had to sign in order to effect the sale of the cottages. SUB-SECT. 5.—SECRET PROFITS AND COMMISSION.

1109. Acceptance of secret commission—Prohibition against. —It is an established rule that a solr. shall not, in any way whatever, in respect of any transactions in the relation between him & his client, make gain to himself, at the expense of his client, beyond the amount of his just & fair professional remuneration.

T., a solr., had a private arrangement with R., by which he was to receive from R. a share in certain property then belonging to R., & to share the profit to be obtained from the sale of that property. In his character of solr., T. acted for clients, a banking co., in the purchase of the larger portion of that property, never communicating to his clients the fact of his having an interest in it:—Held: T. was to be treated as a trustee for his clients in respect of his share of so much of the property as they had actually purchased; but a part of the decree, which had declared him to hold the unsold property also in trust for his clients, was varied; &, instead thereof, the value of T.'s half of that property was directed to be taken into account in ascertaining which was due from him to his clients.

T., having made a large profit on the sale, was ordered to pay back the amount of this profit with the full amount of interest given in cases of a breach of trust, namely, 5 per cent.—*TYRRELL v. The purchaser paid F. £200 in connection with the sale. Before F., who was a solr., was appointed a trustee he received £200 from an insurance co. as commission on policies effected through him on C.'s life as security for trust money lent to C. On the death of C. the B. estates passed to A., who commenced an action for the administration of the estate of C., & an order was made directing F. to pay pltf. the £200 received in connection with the sale of the heirlooms, & also the £200 received from the insurance co. F. failed to comply with that order, & A. applied for leave to issue a writ of attachment against him:—Held: the payment of the £200 received as commission from the insurance co. ought not to be enforced by attachment as the matter was not within the exception in Debtors Act, 1869 (c. 62), s. 4, but attachment ought to issue in respect of the £200 paid by the purchaser of the heirlooms.—Re

SECT. 6.—SOLICITOR ACTING AGAINST FORMER CLIENT.

1121. Whether solicitor will be restrained—Grounds for exercise of jurisdiction.]—The jurisdiction of the ct. to restrain a solr. who has acted in one proceeding from acting in a subsequent proceeding for the party opposed to his former client is not confined to the case where the solr. has discharged himself, but extends to the case where he has been discharged by the client. Semble: the true test to be applied in such cases is to consider whether the second proceeding so flows out of or is connected with the first, as that the solr. must be presumed to be in possession of information bearing upon the matter in dispute.—LITTLE v. KINGSWOOD COLLIERIES CO. (1882), 20 Ch. D. 733; 51 L. J. Ch. 498; 47 L. T. 323; 31 W. R. 178; on appeal, 20 Ch. D., p. 741, C. A.

R. consulted M. with reference to an action for wrongful dismissal which he desired to commence against a co. He then changed his solrs. & issued his writ, & the matter was referred to arbn., the proceedings in which were still in progress. C. was away at the time & knew nothing of the consultations between R. & M., & whilst the arbn. was going on, he was appointed under the name of E. M. & C. to act as solr. for the co. in the arbn. R. applied for an injunction to restrain E. M. & C. from acting for the co.:—Held: there was no general rule that a solr. who had acted for some person either before or after the litigation began could in no case act for the opposite side; the ct. must be satisfied in each case that mischief would result from his so acting; there could be no danger of any breach of confidence, if C. acted for the co.; & the injunction must be refused.—*RAKUSEN v. 1132. — Solicitor formerly acting for personal representative—Acting for legatee.]—A bill was filed by the residuary legatees under a will against the exors., of whom one was also beneficially interested as a legatee, & had undertaken the sole management of its affairs. The bill charged particular acts of mismanagement, & the appropri-

The solr. for pltf., having been for several years the friend & solr. of the managing exor., had become well acquainted with the circumstances of the trust; he had been engaged in recovering money from a debtor to the estate, & had been consulted by the managing exor. when one of the residuary legatees, the present pltf., had applied for the executorship accounts, which had been delivered under the solr.'s advice. The solr.'s bill for the matters was made out against the managing exor., not as exor., but personally. The bill was taxed, & an action brought for the amount, which was paid, & the character of solr. & client thus ceased in 1817. A motion by the managing exor., the former client, for an injunction to restrain the solr. from acting as the solr. for pltf. in the cause against him was dismissed.—*PARRATT v. In the interval & before judgment actually given, D., a former client of B.'s, consulted him professionally whether he could safely leave in C.'s possession property bought by him of C., which was nearly all C.'s property, & on B.'s advice a bill of sale was executed by C. in D.'s favour. When judgment was given, C. filed a petition for liquidation of his affairs, & in consequence of the bill of sale A. only received a dividend under the liquidation proceedings on his judgment:—Held: there was a right of action on the ground of negligence if B. acted in ignorance of his duty; or on the ground of misconduct & breach of duty if he were aware of it.—*BARBER v. The legacy was invested, & a solr., not the exor. of testator, became the obligee of the bond to secure it. The solr. took all necessary steps to obtain the necessary information, & being unsuccessful he demanded a bond of indemnity before paying over the legacy; & then, saying his bill of costs amounted to a certain sum, but not delivering any bill of particulars, he deducted that sum from the legacy & handed over the balance to the next of kin of the deceased legatee, who had taken out administration to him:—Held: no particulars being stated, & the solr., who had constituted himself a trustee, having made professional charges for his trouble in making the inquiries, the bill was taxable notwithstanding payment or retainer of moneys in payment.

(2) Under an order to tax costs as between solr. & client, or to tax generally, the taxing master is at liberty to look to the circumstance of the solr. being a trustee, & to disallow his particular costs, other than costs out of pocket.

By an order in the suit, costs had been ordered to be taxed as between solr. & client, which was done, & no objection taken that the master ought to have disallowed all but costs out of pocket, on the ground that the solr. was a trustee. The taxing master allowed the solr. trustee costs out of pocket only:—Held: the rule which had allowed to solr. trustee costs out of pocket only being well established, the ct. would not, with reference to the question of costs, inquire whether the conduct of the suit by the partner of the solr. trustee was beneficial for all parties, though no party objected to such inquiry, but all costs beyond those out of pocket must be disallowed.—*LYON v. n. Sum paid as commission.—In an action by a creditor against trustees of a deceased debtor, the accounts given in by the trustees were objected to, in respect that credit was therein taken for a sum paid as commission to two of their number, who had acted as law agents & factors for the trust. The ct. disallowed the

He also derived some profit as a solr. in consequence of the employment of part of the mtged. estate for building purposes:—Held: pltf. could not charge him with the profit thus made, as having been made by the employment of the trust estate in his business.—*WHITNEY v. B. accordingly acted, & sent in his bill prepared as between solr. & client, which was paid by the mtgees. B. allowed A. £100 as his share of the profits. After this, on the application of second incumbrances the bill was taxed:—Held: the taxing master was right in taxing it on the principle of solr. & agent, for the agreement between A. & B. was valid, though it enured to the benefit of the mtgees.; & the bill was properly taxable, at the instance of the second incumbrancers, as between them & B.—Re TAYLOR (1854), 18 Beav. 165; 23 L. V. proved the will, & a creditor's action was instituted against her. V. employed the firm of solrs. in which H. was a partner as her solrs. in the action. H. afterwards proved the will, & was made a deft., to the action. When the action came on for further consideration, a question arose whether H. was entitled to his profit costs, & an order was made declaring that he was not entitled to claim payment of profit costs by virtue of the declaration in the will, he being one of the attesting witnesses thereto, such declaration to be without prejudice to any of his rights apart from the clause in the will. The taxing master disallowed H.'s profit costs of action, on the ground that he was a solr.-trustee, & as such not entitled to make a profit out of his trust. Several bills of costs, in respect of professional business transacted by the solr. touching the trust affairs, were comprised in the accounts. The cestui que trust was not informed by the solr. that he was not obliged to pay the professional charges, nor was any other solr. consulted at the time of the settlement by the cestui que trust:—Held: on a bill filed several years after the settlement of the accounts by the cestui que trust against the trustee, containing charges of fraud, & seeking relief in respect of the bills of costs, & praying that the release executed by him to the trustee might be declared void, the cestui que trust, not having proved a case of fraud against the trustee, was not entitled to have the release declared void, & the bill must be dismissed against the trustee with costs, as to that part of the relief prayed; but pltf. was entitled to relief in respect of the professional charges made by the trustee, & included in the accounts settled, & a reference to the master to tax the bills of costs, was accordingly directed by the ct.—TODD v. 1165. ———— Re-opening settled account.]—S. & S., the trustees & exors. of a will, who were solrs. carrying on business in partnership & were authorised by the will to charge for professional business done by them for the estate wound up the estate & sent an account to the five residuary legatees with a letter saying that, if they would call at the office of the exors. on a day named, the exors. would give them any explanations they might require, & would hand them over cheques for their shares of the residue. The account was not a complicated one, & among the items was, "paid Messrs. S. & co. costs relating to executorship & counsel's fees & payments made by them, £116 17s. 2d." The ultimate balance shown was £331 3s. 4d., the bulk of testator's property having been disposed of by specific bequests. The residuary legatees attended, signed at the foot of the account a memorandum, "We have examined & approve of the foregoing accounts," received cheques for their shares, & executed a release to the trustees & exors. The trustees & exors. never informed the residuary legatees that they were entitled to have a bill of costs delivered, & to have it taxed if they thought fit. Nine years afterwards three of the residuary legatees brought an action to have it declared that the release was not binding on them, & to have a bill of costs delivered & taxed. On production of documents there were found in the costs ledger of the solrs. items which came to more than the amount charged for costs in their account, there was no evidence of excessive charge beyond a deposition by an experienced solr.'s clerk that in his opinion at least one-sixth would be taxed off the amount of costs appearing in the ledger, & there was no proof of error in the rest of the account:—Held: although it was the duty of the solr. trustees to have informed the residuary legatees that they were entitled to have a bill of costs, & if they thought fit to have it taxed or moderated, the omission to do so was not by itself a sufficient ground for opening a settled account; in order to do so it was necessary to show that injustice would be done by allowing the settled account to stand; that if excessive charges had been shown the account must have been opened; but as no error had been shown the action had rightly been dismissed.—Re WEBB, LAMBERT v. 1166. Appointment by co-trustees as acting trustee.]—M., a solr., & five others, were appointed & acted as exors. & trustees under the will of C., whose assets consisted chiefly of lawsuits in which C. was personally interested. M. was also the principal legatee. The trustees, by letter of attorney, appointed M. as acting trustee to manage the trust, & account to them for the funds after deducting his reasonable charges & costs. M. thereupon kept on all the lawsuits, conducting them at his own discretion, & resenting all interference of his co-trustees, & refusing for seven years to give them any account of the trust funds. At length, after exhausting all those funds, he delivered his bill of costs showing a balance of £2,000 for which he claimed to hold them personally liable:—Held: there being no express contract, any such inference from the circumstances, as that he was to be remunerated in the ordinary way by his co-trustees, was extravagant.—MANSON v. Under this direction the solr. exor. delivered bills of costs which included charges for all business done by him, whether such business was strictly professional or could have been transacted by a lay exor. without the assistance of a solr. :—Held : all items which were not of a strictly professional character ought to be disallowed.—*Re CHAPPLE, NEWTON v. 1183. Agreement by committee of inspection—To fix remuneration.]—By Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (c. 52), s. 72, where creditors appoint any person to be trustee of a debtor's estate his remuneration, if any, is to be fixed, if the creditors so resolve, by the committee of inspection, & shall be in the nature of a commission or percentage, one part payable on the amount realised & the other part on the amount distributed in dividend. By Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (c. 52), s. 72, where the trustee is a solr. he may contract that the remuneration for his services as trustee shall include all professional services. The creditors of a bkpt. appointed a solr. the trustee in the bkpcy. "at a remuneration to be fixed by the committee of inspection"; & subsequently the committee passed a resolution that the remuneration of the trustee should be "his proper professional charges as a solr. for attendance & work done & expenses incurred by him in or about the proceedings in the bkpcy."—Held: the resolution was invalid, inasmuch as it was contrary to Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (c. 52), s. 72, which required that the remuneration should be a commission or percentage on the amount realised or distributed. Semble: where the trustee, being a solr., contracts, under Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (c. 52), s. 73, with the committee of inspection that his remuneration shall include his professional charges, the proper course is to fix his commission or percentage as trustee under Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (c. 52), s. 72, at such a rate as will cover his reasonable professional charges.—*Re WAYMAN, Ex p. FINCH (1857), 28 L. T. O. S. 279, L. JJ.

1186. Summary jurisdiction of court—Removal from trust.]—The cestuis que trust under a deed, the trustee of which was a solr., presented a petition in the matter of the solr. & in the matter of Trustee Act, alleging that the trustee had taken the benefit of Insolvent Act, had repudiated the trusts, refused to discharge his duties as trustee, & otherwise misconducted himself in the trusts, & praying the appointment of a new trustee in his place & a vesting order. The trustee denied or offered explanations of the various imputations against him, claimed a balance to be due to him, & objected to being removed from the trusteeship:—Held: Trustee Act, 1850 (c. 60), s. 3, does not give the ct. jurisdiction under the Act to displace a trustee who is desirous of continuing in the trust; the trustee could not, under the summary jurisdiction of the ct. over solrs., be removed from the trust for acts done by him, not in the character of solr. or in any relation immediately arising out of that character, but in the character of trustee, & that the order could not be sustained.—Re BLANCHARD (1861), 3 De G. Order for accounts.]—Where on bill, against a firm of solrs. who were the trustees of a settlement, for an account, but in which there was no charge of wilful neglect or default, & no relief prayed as against it, pltf. succeeded in establishing his case. The ct., in ordering an account, directed an inquiry as to defts.' dealings with the trust fund, & if on taking the accounts it should appear that they had been guilty of wilful neglect or default in the discharge of their duty, they should be charged, in taking the accounts, with such wilful neglect or default.—NASH v. HOWELL (1869), 21 L. T. 743.

1189. — Cost of vouching.]—A solr. was the exor. & trustee of the will of testator, together with testator's two sons, one of whom took no part in the management of the estate, but the other, who was also a specific devisee of part of testator's real estate on which a legacy was charged, at first managed the property. The solr. limited himself to giving advice to the brothers. A lady entitled for life under the will to the income of a legacy, pressed for accounts, & the solr. forwarded to her sixteen months after testator's death a paper which purported to be an account of the acting trustee as manager of the estate. The account did not distinguish between capital & income. No subsequent accounts were delivered, & the sums due on account of the legacy were in arrear. The legatee took out a summons against the three trustees for an account, & to make them personally liable for costs. The son of testator, who had not acted, died pending the proceedings. On the hearing of the summons a general administration order was made & costs reserved. From the master's certificate it appeared that the solr. trustee & the acting trustee were chargeable with certain sums to the estate. No charge was made against the solr. other than his refusal to account:—Held: the solr. trustee & the acting trustee must pay the costs of pltf. & of the personal representatives of the deceased trustee down to & including judgment & also the costs of taking & vouching the accounts.—*Re SKINNER, COOPER v. 1201. Gift by beneficiary—Out of residue of estate.]—Testator appointed a solr. as one of the exors. of his will. Shortly after testator's death a document in the following terms was signed by each of the beneficiaries under the will. "To the exors. of the will of the late Mr." (naming testator) "as one of the persons interested in the residue of the estate of" (testator) "I hereby signify my wish & request that the sum of £1,000 be paid to Mr." (naming the solr. exor.) "from the residue of the estate, in consideration of his consenting to act as an exor. of the will, & as an expression of my approval of his conduct in relation to the affairs of deceased; & I agree to bear my proportion of such sum of £1,000 in proportion to the value of my interest in the estate." There was a conflict of evidence as to whether the proposal that the gift should be made emanated in the first instance from the solr. exor. himself or not. The money having been duly handed over to him, one of the beneficiaries afterwards commenced this action to have the document signed by himself cancelled, & his proportion of the £1,000 repaid. It was admitted that deft. was the first to bring the proposal before this particular beneficiary, though it was said to have been done at the request of another beneficiary:—Held: such a gift to an exor. from a beneficiary will not be upheld save under exceptional circumstances, circumstances which negative any suspicion of misrepresentation, pressure, or unfairness on the part of the exor., & establish that the gift or promise was made by the beneficiary acting deliberately, & with a thorough knowledge & appreciation of what he is doing, & independently of any influence on the part of the exor., or fear consequent upon his position; that in the present case, though there were no threats of any kind, yet there was necessarily pressure incident to the very fact of deft.'s position as exor., & his being the only person thoroughly conversant with the affairs of testator; pltf. accordingly signed the document from an apprehension that it would be the worse for him, owing to deft.'s position, if he declined to sign it; notwithstanding the wording of the document, there was no bargaining in the transaction, or any idea of paying debt. to induce him to act as exor.; & pltf. was therefore entitled to have his share of the money repaid to him, & the document signed by him given up to be cancelled.—WHEELER v. SARGEANT (1893), 69 L. T. 181; 3 R. 663.

He also wrote to a third party. In consequence of the letter to the third party, which had been communicated to him, the client wrote to the solr., "I am off to Scotland, & will send you a cheque for the whole amount on my return." The solr. permitted a few months to elapse, & issued a writ, whereupon the client applied for an order to tax:—Held: he was entitled to the order. As the client's letter was not in reply to the solr.'s demand for payment, there was no agreement in writing within Solicitors Act, 1870 (c. 28), s. 4; & the forbearance of the solr. to sue, coupled with the client's letter, did not bring the case within the sect.—*PONTIFEX v. This arrangement was embodied in a receipt signed by the client, on payment to her by the solr. of the amount recovered for her in the action:—Held: (1) the receipt though signed only by the client & not by the solr., was "an agreement in writing" within Solicitors Act, 1870 (c. 28), s. 4; (2) the money retained by the solr. was, in view of his client's consent as contained in the receipt, a payment by the client to the solr. within Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 41.—*Re THOMPSON, Ex p. 1220. What constitutes agreement "respecting amount & manner of payment"—Retainer in criminal proceedings—Agreement for payment out of proceeds at sale of furniture—To "cover" costs of defence.]—A solr. was retained to defend a man charged with embezzlement & to act for him in a civil action in which he was deft. Both retainers were in writing. By the retainer in the criminal proceedings which was dated June 14, 1912, the client agreed that the solr. should receive the proceeds of the sale of certain furniture "to cover" the charges of the defence. The solr. received these proceeds. By the retainer in the civil action the solr. was to act for the client in the conduct of the action for an inclusive fee of one hundred guineas. On Oct. 28, 1912, the client pleaded guilty to the criminal charge & was sentenced to penal servitude. Subsequently judgment was recovered against him under R. S. C., Ord. 14, in the civil action. On Feb. 10, 1914, applt., who had been appointed on Oct. 1, 1913, administrator of the client's property under Forfeiture Act, 1870 (c. 23), s. 9, applied by summons in the K. B. Div. under Solicitors Act, 1870 (c. 28), s. 8, to set aside the agreements as to costs, as being unfair & unreasonable, & for the delivery of a bill of costs & for taxation. The solr. in answer to the application contended (inter alia) that the amount agreed by the civil retainer had been paid more than twelve months before the application, inasmuch as he had collected with, as he alleged, the authority of the client, the sum of £100 from debtor of the client, & that, therefore, by reason of Solicitors Act, 1870 (c. 28), s. 10, the application was out of time. On Oct. 1, 1912, the client had assigned all his real & personal estate to the liquidator of a co. which had formerly employed him. On Apr. 1, 1914, the liquidator assigned the estate to applt. On Apr. 4, 1914, the master made an order setting aside the agreements & ordering the delivery of a bill of costs for taxation. On appeal the judge at chambers set aside the master's order on the ground that by reason of payment the application was out of time. On appeal to the Div. Ct.:—Held: (1) the retainer in the criminal proceedings was not an agreement "respecting the amount & manner of payment" of the solr.'s charges within Solicitors Act, 1870 (c. 28), s. 4; (2) with regard to the retainer in the civil action, the solr. could succeed on his defence of payment only if the £100 had been received & retained by him in satisfaction of the agreed sum to the knowledge of the client & with the intention on the latter's part that the agreement should in that way be ratified; & there must be a further inquiry as to the facts relevant to this question.—Re JACKSON, [1915] 1 K. 1223. — Payment in discharge of past costs.]—

Where a solr. accepted a lump sum in discharge of his client's costs of a completed purchase without any agreement in writing, & without delivery of a formal bill of costs:—Held: the bill was not outstanding, & did not require to be included in an ex parte order for taxation obtained by the solr. in respect of another bill.

Semle: a payment in discharge of past costs by way of accord & satisfaction is not an agreement for remuneration within Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881 (c. 44), s. 8, & precludes taxation in the absence of special circumstances. A solr. acting for both mtgor. & mtgee. is not required to include the mtge. costs where there is no relation of solr. & client as to those costs between him & the mtgor., in his application for an ex parte order for taxation of separate bills against the mtgor. client.—Re DUNCAN (1907), 51 Sol. Jo. 485.

1224. Sufficiency of signature—Signature by party to be bound.]—(1) An agreement between solr. & client is a good agreement under above Act, s. 8, if signed by the person to be bound thereby, although it is not signed by the other party.

(2) In order to impeach an agreement between solr. & client as unfair & unreasonable under above Act, s. 8 (4), it is not necessary that an action should have been brought to set it aside, or a previous order for taxation obtained; but, on a summons for taxation, if the evidence shows that there has been such an agreement & that there are grounds for suspicion of unfairness, the ct. will order the taxing master in taxing the bill of costs to consider whether the agreement was fair & reasonable.

1226. What constitutes agreement within the Act—Undertaking in letter—Costs of mortgage.]—S. being desirous of borrowing money on mtge. wrote to P., a solr., a letter instructing him to raise £300 upon a specified security, & undertaking "to pay your costs, which I agree at £20, exclusive of money out of pocket, to be incurred in & about doing what is necessary for the purpose of these instructions." P. found a mtgee. & carried out the mtge., acting on behalf of both the mtgor. & the mtgee., & retained out of the £300, £20 for costs of both parties, other than out-of-pocket costs. S. then applied for an order directing P. to deliver a bill of all such fees, charges & disbursements as he claimed or had deducted, & referring such bill when delivered to taxation:—Held: (1) S., the mtgor., was a "client" & had employed P. as his solr. within above Act, s. 1; (2) although the £20 was partly in respect of business in which the solr. was acting on behalf of the mtgee., the letter was an agreement for remuneration between client & solr. within above Act, s. 8; (3) in the absence of evidence that the charge of £20 was either unfair or unreasonable it ought not to be referred for taxation.—Re PALMER (1890), 45 Ch. 1229. Jurisdiction of court to construe—On application for taxation.]—A public co., who by their act of incorporation were bound to pay all costs, charges, & expenses incurred in the purchase of lands either by themselves or the vendor, entered into a contract for the purchase of lands not comprised within the compulsory clause of their Act, & in the memorandum of agreement it was stipulated that the costs, etc., as well of themselves as of the vendor, should be paid & discharged by them pursuant to their Act. Subsequently they obtained another Act of Parliament, by which it was enacted that all costs, etc., which they were liable to pay should be taxed as therein mentioned. Then Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), was passed; & the co. having refused to pay vendor's solr.'s bill of costs when delivered, an action of covenant was brought on the agreement. The co. then moved to refer the bill for taxation, but the motion was refused with costs. On a motion or petition for taxation, there is no jurisdiction to construe an agreement; but if there be any equitable grounds for interference with the legal effect of it, or any necessity to consider its import, it can only be by bill filed for that purpose.—Re RHODES (1844), 8 Beav. 224; 14 L. n. Scale fee disallowed on sale of real property.]—In a contract for the sale of real property the purchaser entered into an agreement as follows: "Assignment to be prepared by my solr. at my expense, together with all searches & abstracts of title or copies of documents." The vendor's solr. in furnishing his bill of costs claimed the scale fee, relying on Solrs.' Remuneration Act, 1881, General Orders, 1884, sched. 1. The taxing master ruled that the bill was prepared on a wrong principle, & that as the contract was specific the vendor's solr. was not entitled to the scale fee, & directed an amended bill of costs to be furnished setting forth the charges in detail:—Held: the taxing master was jurisdiction to determine the construction of a disputed special contract as to the costs.

(3) The true construction of Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 38, is, that a third party, liable to pay costs originally payable by a client to his solr., stands, on a reference to tax, in the same situation as the client himself, & the costs must be taxed as between solr. & client.—Re THOMPSON (1845), 8 Beav. 237; 1 New Pract. 1232. Limitation of client's liability—"Carrying on" action.]—Where the following memorandum was given by M., an attorney, to H., his client: "I undertake to carry on this action on having the cash provided for costs out of pocket, such costs not to exceed £15 including counsel's fees, not any witnesses' expenses":—Held: H. was not liable for any costs beyond the £15, & the words "carrying on" meant to execution & not to judgment only.—*MOON v. 1233. Liability dependent on success of action—Costs awarded but not paid.]—Applt., a solr., agreed that he would not charge resp. (a) such costs in excess of party & party costs as are usually known by the term solr. & client costs, (b) profit costs in litigious matters where resp. lost his own case, unless in any such action, resp. was awarded any costs such as costs of an issue or interlocutory costs when applt. was to be entitled to look to resp. for an equivalent amount. If resp. succeeded in obtaining judgment applt. was to be entitled to look to resp. for (c) the full amount of his out-of-pocket expenses & disbursement or other payments, (d) party & party costs exclusive of sums received by him under (c). If resp. lost applt. was to receive disbursements only, & any party & party costs awarded to resps. Resp. requested applt. to confirm this arrangement in writing, & after a discussion of the difficulty in which a client would be placed by reason of Solicitors Act, 1870 (c. 28), & the decision in Gundry v. Sainsbury, No. 1207, ante, an attempt was made by applt. to do so, & at the same time to protect resp. On the construction of the written arrangement:—Held: in an action by resp. against a third party, in which resp. recovered costs, but which costs, owing to defts. insolvency were never paid, applt. was entitled not only to his out-of-pocket expenses, but to judgment against resp. on his bill of costs as delivered.—*MCLEAN v. 1237. — Must be fair.]—The settlement of a solr.'s bill by the client for a fixed sum is valid, & will not be disturbed by the ct., when it has been entered into fairly, & with proper knowledge on both sides.

Several years after a solr. had ceased to act for his client, an agreement was entered into between them, for the delivery up of the client's papers, in consideration of a fixed sum to be paid to the solr. when the Ct. of Ch. should declare that he was one of the next of kin of E. & entitled to a fund in ct. The count then alleged, "That in consideration that pltf. had, at the request of the co., promised the co. to perform his part of the agreement, the co. promised pltf. to perform their part, & to retain & employ him as such attorney & solr. of the said co., on the terms aforesaid." The count then alleged for breach, that "though for a small space of time the co. did retain & employ pltf. as such attorney & solr. on the terms aforesaid, & did pay him a small part of the salary, & though he was always ready & willing to advise & act for the co., & to accept the salary on the terms aforesaid, & in all other respects to fulfil the agreement on his part, yet the co. disregarding, etc., did not, nor would, continue to retain or employ pltf. as such attorney or solr. on the terms aforesaid, but, on the contrary," in May, "wrongfully dismissed & discharged pltf. from such employment & retainer, & then & from thence hitherto have wholly refused to retain or employ him as such attorney & solr. of the co., & to pay him the salary as aforesaid, by reason of which last-mentioned premises pltf. has wholly lost & been deprived of the salary, & also of divers great gains & profits which he might & otherwise would have derived from such employment in & about the prosecuting & defending of suits & preparing of bonds, etc." After a verdict for pltf., with £200 damages:—Held: the count did sufficiently allege a consideration for the promise to retain & employ pltf. as attorney & solr., & the consideration was not exhausted by the promise on the part of the co. to perform the agreement.—EMMENS v. A. became bkpt. in 1847, & shortly after obtained his certificate, & died. The suit proceeded, the assignees not interfering, & a decree was pronounced under which the costs were awarded to A., & were received by the solr. In an action against the solr. by the assignees of A.:—Held: the contingent right to have the amount advanced by him for costs repaid under the agreement, which was a valid agreement, & made upon a sufficient consideration, was an interest in A., which on his bkpcy. passed to his assignees; & consequently the latter were entitled to recover the sum so paid by A. as money received to their use.—*MORGAN v. A number of letters were written, & according to the solr.'s statement, between twenty & thirty interviews held, & other business done. On Mar. 31, 1888, the client & his solr. signed a memorandum of agreement that the bill of costs, without being made up to date, should be £42. The client was a gentleman's valet, & alleged that he acted in ignorance & under pressure in coming to the agreement:—Held: under the circumstances, the bargain was unfair & property in suit:—Held: that such a contract stands on a different footing from one between private persons, & the ct., before enforcing it, should require pltf. clearly to show its fairness, & that no undue advantage has been taken of the client. It is necessary in such a case to look to the whole of the circumstances & the substance of the transaction, & not merely to the language of the agreement.—*NUTHOO LALL v. 1270. Agreement to take bill of exchange.]—A solr. cannot evade his obligation to deliver a bill of costs by taking a bill of exchange from his client for an agreed amount.

On Mar. 22, 1910, deft. entered into an agreement with his solr., whereby deft. agreed the costs due from him to the solr. for work done at the sum of £2,000 & gave him a bill of exchange for that amount payable on demand; the payment not to be enforced for two years. In 1912 the receiver of the property of the solr.'s firm, appointed in a partnership action, presented the bill, which was dishonoured, & then brought an action on the bill in the name of the firm against deft., claiming £2,000 & interest from Mar. 22, 1912. Deft. obtained leave to defend the action &, without delivering a defence, he issued a summons, which was not intituled in the matter of the Solicitors Acts, asking for an order that pltf. should deliver to him a complete bill of costs for work done up to Dec. 11, 1909; that the agreement should be inquired into under Solicitors Act, 1870 (c. 28), s. 4, & Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881 (c. 44), s. 8, & the bill taxed; & that proceedings in the action should be stayed:—Held: the client was entitled under the Acts of Parliament to have a complete bill of costs delivered & an inquiry into the agreement; the solr. could not escape from this liability by taking a bill of exchange for the agreed amount; the summons must be headed under the Acts of Parliament; & the action ought not to be stayed.—*RAY v. 1271. Agreement as to costs of promoting company—Payment out of deposits.]—The solr. who had projected, & at his own expense brought forward, a scheme for making a railway, entered into an agreement with the persons who became the provisional committee for prosecuting the undertaking, that the costs & expenses should be paid by such solr. & projector, & that the members of such provisional committee should not be personally liable to him for such costs & disbursements, but that the same should be paid out of the fund to arise from the deposits to be paid on the shares:—Held: this agreement was not illegal as between the provisional committee & the shareholders, regarded as trustee & cestui que trust, inasmuch as the trustee was entitled to be indemnified by his cestui que trust in respect of the costs & expenses properly incurred.

Qu.: whether the contract to pay future costs out of the deposits was illegal as between the solr. & client, attending to the fact that the client, being a trustee, might properly stipulate that he should not be personally liable for the costs to be incurred, but that the same should be paid exclusively out of the trust fund.—*PARSONS v. 1284. — Jurisdiction of court—Where agreement pronounced fair by taxing master.]—The question whether an agreement as to costs between solr. & client is fair & reasonable under Solicitors Act, 1870 (c. 28), ss. 8, 9, is one for the ct. or a judge to determine. Such an agreement must be not only fair as between the parties, but it must also be reasonable; & if the work to be done by the solr. is such that the tribunal which has to determine that question would say that the amount to be paid by the client in respect of it is unreasonable, then such agreement would be declared void upon the ground that it is unreasonable in its terms. Semble: the jurisdiction of the ct. or judge under sects. 8 & 9, even where an opinion has been pronounced under sect. 4 that an agreement is fair & reasonable, is as large as if no such opinion had been pronounced, although in such a case, when exercising the jurisdiction given by sects. 8 & 9, the tribunal which has to examine the agreement will require a very strong case to act under those sects. after the jurisdiction under sect. 4 has already been exercised.—Re STUART, Ex p. 1286. Effect of delay.]—This is an application by a client for the delivery & taxation of a solrs.' bill. The client, being desirous of turning his business into a limited liability co., entered into the agreement with his solrs. Prima facie the sum stated seems unreasonable. There has been no payment within the meaning of Solicitors Act, & no delivery of bill. Although there has been a long delay, there is no Statute of Limitations applicable. I therefore direct the delivery of the bill in the usual way. If resps. deliver a bill containing one item, that is, the agreed amount, I direct the taxing master, under Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881 (c. 44), s. 8 (4), to certify if the agreement is fair & reasonable, costs to be reserved until the taxing master has certified (BYRNE, J.).—*Re A. & B., Ex p. Plea, that the agreement was for services to be done by pltf. as deft.'s attorney & solr. within Solicitors Act, 1870 (c. 28), s. 8, which enacts that "no action shall be brought upon any such agreement." On demurrer:—Held: the plea was bad, & the action maintainable, for sect. 8 was intended to prevent actions to recover the remuneration agreed upon in lieu of costs when the work had been done, & did not apply to an action for refusing to allow the attorney to do the work & earn the remuneration.—REES v. several claims in one bill, the client is entitled to have the whole bill taxed; if the attorney does not deliver a specific bill as to the whole, it is the same as if he had delivered no bill at all; & it makes no difference that the jury, at the trial of an action to recover the whole amount of the various claims, knew that, in fact, the client is not liable for certain of the claims. For the question as to the sufficiency of a signed bill under the statute arises prior to & is independent of the question as to liability; since a bill is referred to taxation, save in special & excepted cases, on the assumption of liability, & simply to settle the question of amount. It is doubtful whether an attorney may maintain an action for work as to which he has delivered a bill, although there is other work pending for which he has a distinct claim against his client, & which he has not included in his bill nor in his action. But as a bill bad in part is bad altogether, even as to a claim not maintainable, if it does not contain all the claims included in the particulars in the action it is insufficient.—*PIGOT v. Repeated applications for an account, even although contradicted on the other side, if coupled with any reasonable ground for not having before applied to the ct., not contradicted, as, for example, that hitherto the attorney has been in indigent circumstances, will excuse the delay.—Re VANN (1854), 15 C. certain life policies. He employed a solr. to carry out the transaction & to prepare the mtge. deed, & he opened an account at a bank upon which the solrs. could draw to pay the debts. The son went abroad to serve with the army, appointing his wife & the solr. his attorneys to act for him in the matter. The solr. accordingly paid the debts & prepared the mtge. deed, giving a charge on the policies for the total sum paid. The items of which the total sum constituting the mtge. debt was made up appeared in the schedule to the deed. The deed contained a recital that the item of £914 appearing in the schedule was "the ascertained & agreed amount of the costs & disbursements of" the lender's solrs. for the negotiations leading to & of & incidental to the indenture; & in the schedule, under date Nov. 27, 1917, the £914 was stated to be the lender's solr.'s costs for services mentioned in the recital. It appeared that on that date the solr. drew a cheque payable to himself for this amount on the account at the bank, & so paid himself. The son was at that time abroad & did not return until after the deed was executed by his attorney. No bill of these costs was delivered. The solr. was not a party to the mtge. deed. The son thereupon applied for delivery of a bill of costs. The mother did not join in the application. The solr. opposed the application on the ground that the sum was not charged against the son, but was charged against the mother & had been approved & paid by her as mtgor. out of the money lent to her by the son as mtgee. :—Held: the solr. must be ordered to deliver a bill of costs.

The powers of the ct. to order delivery of a bill & taxation rest, in the first place, on the original jurisdiction of the ct. over its officers; in the second place on Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 37, which empowers the ct. to order delivery of a bill in any case where they could under the Act refer the bill for taxation if delivered. Indeed, in some cases delivery of the bill may be ordered to see whether there are grounds for taxation (SCRUTTON, L.J.).—Re FOSTER, BARNATO v. FOSTER, [1920] 3 K. B. 306; 89 L. J. K. 1392. Constructive delivery—Mortgagors & mortgagees—Trustees & cestuis que trust.]—R. & B. acted jointly in a sale of copyholds to which their respective clients were entitled, B. having the conduct of the sale. The purchaser required the property to be enfranchised, & wrote to B. asking him to arrange for the enfranchisement, & undertaking to pay his charges & the expenses. R. made out his bill of costs against his own clients, sent it to B., who sent it to the purchaser. The purchaser obtained an order for taxation of this bill on the usual petition of course by a third party. On motion by R. to stay all further proceedings under this order:—Held: the common form allegation in a petition of course, that the solr. “delivered to your petitioners his bill of fees & disbursements,” is a material allegation which is not satisfied by a merely constructive delivery; in the circumstances of this case there had been no delivery to the purchaser; & the order had been irregularly obtained, & must be discharged.

Now, delivery in the ordinary practice by the mtgee.’s solr. of his bill of costs is not to his own client, but it is to the mtgor. or to the mtgor.’s solr.; & consequently one finds that in the common form in the orders is an allegation that the mtgor. has had the bill delivered to him by the mtgee.’s solr. I think, for reasons which I am now about to state, that that is a material allegation, because there are cases in which the bill which the solr. delivers to his own client, the mtgee., is a bill which would be absolutely right as between himself & the mtgee., though possibly not so between himself & the mtgor. The mtgee. might have told his solr. to do certain things; the solr. might have explained in his ordinary course of duty, “I will do that for you, but recollect if it is done you cannot charge the mtgor.” The mtgee. might say, “Well, I will have it done,” & then the solr. delivers his bill to the mtgee., which is a proper bill as between the two. That bill is not delivered, I will assume, in point of fact, to the mtgor. or his solr.: Can the mtgor. obtain taxation of it upon an allegation that the bill has been “delivered to him”? In my opinion he cannot. I think the delivery of the bill cannot mean a constructive delivery of the bill, & there would be no constructive delivery of the bill in the case which I have just put. So also in the case of a trustee & cestuis que trust, where the trustee employs his own solr. That is an ordinary typical case. In that case the trustee may have given special instructions to the solr. which would warrant him, & justify him, as between himself & his individual client the trustee, in making certain charges. Upon that the solr. might draw out his bill & send it in to the trustee; but I think that that could not be called a “delivery,” certainly it cannot be said, in point of fact, to be a delivery to the cestuis que trust; & I think, in the case I am putting, it would not be right to hold that constructively it was a delivery of the bill to the cestuis que trust (CHITTY, J.).—Re ROBERTSON (1889), 42 Ch. (1) In an action by the solrs. of a proposed railway co., against A., a member of the provisional committee, for work done by them for the co., before, whilst, & after A. was a member, a delivery of a signed bill, addressed to the committee, to B., an earlier member of the committee, at his place of business, & containing some items incurred before A. became a member, is not a sufficient delivery within Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 37, to charge A.

(2) The bill should be delivered either at the office of the co., or at least to some person who can reasonably be considered to represent the committee.—EDWARDS v. LAWLESS (1848), 6 C. B. 329; 6 Dow. & L. 105; 5 Ry. & Can. Cas. 357; 17 L. J. C. P. 293; 11 L. T. O. S. 310; 136 E. R. 1278.

1444. — & scheme abandoned—Office of provisional committee.]—In 1845, certain persons, one of whom was deft., formed themselves into a committee for establishing a railway co. They took offices in Moorgate Street, where a brass plate was put up with the name of the co. engraved thereon. In Nov. 1845, the co. was provisionally registered. In Jan. 1846, the scheme was abandoned, & deft. interfered no further with it. A sub-committee was afterwards appointed, by whom it did not appear, for the purpose of ascertaining & arranging the claims upon the committee men. In Sept. 1846, plff., a local attorney & agent of the co., delivered a signed bill at the office in Moorgate Street, addressed to "the provisional committee of the co.":—Held: (WILDE, C.J. & VAUGHAN-WILLIAMS, J.) this was not a sufficient delivery at the "office of business" of deft., to charge him within Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 37; (COLTMAN, J. & MAULE, J.) it was.—BLANDY v. DE BURGH (1848), 6 C. B. 623; 6 Dow. & L. 412; 5 Ry. & Can. Cas. 361; 18 L. J. C. P. 2; 12 L. T. O. S. 217; 12 Jur. 1005; 136 E. R. 1393.

1445. At address given by client—At office of third party.]—A person who had no place of business of his own, directed communications to be addressed & sent to him at his attorney's office, where he occasionally called & wrote letters. An attorney's bill of costs was addressed & left there for him more than a month before action brought, yet he did not actually receive it but a fortnight before action:—Held: there was evidence for the jury to find that the bill of costs was properly left there a month before action in compliance with Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 37.—SPYER v. BERNARD (1863), 2 New Rep. 172; sub nom. SPIER v. BERNARD, 8 L. T. 396.

1446. Right to deliver bill in parts.]—Where an attorney did different kinds of professional work for a client, & after all the business was transacted sent in a bill for one part of the business, & subsequently sent in a bill for the other part, & commenced an action for the first part of the business before the expiration of the month in respect of the delivery of the second bill, & after the expiration of that month commenced an action for the other part, the ct. made an order for the consolidation of the two actions.—BEARDSALL v. CHEETHAM (1858), E. B. & E. 243; 27 L. J. Q. B. 367; 31 L. T. O. S. 115; 6 W. R. 504; 120 E. R. 499.

1449. Delivery of several bills by London agent—Whether treated as one at option of country solicitor.]—London solrs. acted as agents in London for a country solr. during the years 1877 to 1884 inclusive. The agency was terminated in 1884. During the period of the agency the London agents delivered to the country solr., generally once a year but sometimes oftener, detailed bills of the charges which they claimed against him in each of the actions or other matters in which they had acted for him. They also delivered to him a cash account for each year, in which he was credited with all payments made by him to them, & all moneys received by them on his behalf, & was debited with all payments made by them to him or on his behalf, & with the gross amounts of the several bills of charges which had been delivered. The balance appearing to be due from him on each account but the last was carried on to the next account. Some of the actions continued during several years, & one of them, Rhodes v. Jenkins, continued during the whole period of the agency, & was not then concluded. After the close of the agency the country solr. claimed a taxation of the whole of the bills:—Held: the bills of costs in Rhodes v. Jenkins, notwithstanding the fact that all the costs in it had not yet been taxed, being in fact separate bills, could not be treated as one continuous bill, at the option of the country solr.—Re NELSON, SON & HASTINGS (1885), 30 Ch. J. Effect of Non-Delivery.

1453. Debt not barred—Action to recover not maintainable.]—To assumpsit on an attorney’s bill of costs, deft. pleaded a set-off, & in support of that plea, put in an account furnished to him by pltf. Pltf.’s credit side of the account contained his claim for costs, but of this no signed bill had been delivered, & deft. therefore contended that the debit side only of pltf.’s account could be looked to:—Held: the whole account was evidence for the jury, as the non-delivery of a signed bill does not bar the debt, but merely, if insisted on, prevents its recovery by action.—HARRISON v. 1476. Alteration in firm—Work done by old & new firm—Bill signed by new firm.]—Where attorneys bring an action upon their signed bill, which bill contains some items which they are not entitled to recover, the action may be maintained for the residue.

A. & B. were partners as attorneys, & as such transacted business for C., a client. They then took D. into partnership, & A. went out of the firm, which, however, still retained his name. The new firm also transacted business for C., & a signed bill having been delivered in the names of A., B. & D., & an action brought to recover the whole amount due in respect of the business performed by both firms, & pltf., having at the trial abandoned all the items due to the old firm of A.

1477. — Unsigned bill in covering letter of new firm.]—A bill of costs for professional work done in part by one firm of solrs. & in part by another firm who have succeeded to the practice of the first firm is properly signed & delivered so as to enable the new firm to sue for & recover the whole costs if, though itself unsigned, it is delivered together with a letter signed by the new firm referring to the bill.

Professional work was done by a firm, which consisted at first of R. & P., & afterwards of P. & G. practising under the name of R., P. & G., the business & debts of R. & P. having been transferred to R., P. & G. Bills for the costs of the whole work were delivered unsigned, but inclosed with a letter signed by R., P. & G. referring to the bills :—Held : the bills were properly signed & delivered to enable R., P. & G. to sue for & recover the whole amount, as to the earlier items, as assignees of R. & P. ; as to the later items, in their own right.—*PENLEY v. 1478. Assignment to firm of costs previously due to member—No notice of assignment to client—Unsigned bill in firm name with letter from solicitor—Effect of addition of firm name.]—Where a solr. takes a partner & assigns to the new firm the right to recover costs owing to him but no notice of the assignment is given to the client, the bill of costs may be sued on by the solr. who did the work, even if it be made out in the name of the firm & not signed, provided that a covering letter is signed by the solicitor who did the work ; & the addition to the letter of the signature of the firm does not make the bill a bad bill.—*MCLEAN v. SUB-SECT. 5.—FORM AND CONTENTS OF BILL.

A. In General.

See Solicitors Act, 1813 (c. 73), s. 37.

1479. Information for purposes of taxation—Sufficient information.]—(1) Although an attorney's bill contains items not specified according to the 2 Geo. 2, c. 23, s. 23, he may still recover the portion of his bill, as to which the provisions of the statute have been complied with.

Seven items in the bill were stated in the aggregate ; but two only were found by the arbitrator, to whom the cause had been referred, to be for business done at law or in equity :—Held : pltf. might recover the five other items.

(2) An attorney is bound to deliver to his client a bill, containing his whole charges : a delivery of a bill, containing only the items of the extra costs, & omitting the items of taxed costs which have been received from the other side, is not a sufficient compliance with the statute.

The third question is, whether the charges in respect of extra costs are sufficiently stated ; & it appears to me they do not comply with the requisites of the statute. Those charges by themselves are not intelligible to the officer of the ct. An attorney's bill, generally speaking, ought to give a history of the causes, so as to enable the officer to judge if the propriety of the various items of which it is composed ; but if part only of the charges are set forth he has not sufficient materials whereon to form his judgment. A delivery of a bill containing merely the extra costs is certainly not according to the general practice, which is for the attorney to deliver a bill of the whole costs giving his client credit for the sum that has been received (TINDAL, C.J.).—*WALLER v. 1481. — Defendant already in possession of information.]—(1) Where an attorney's bill of costs, delivered under Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 37, contains items applicable to proceedings in the superior cts. of law, but does not contain any statement from which it can be inferred in which of those cts. the business was transacted the bill is to be presumed to be a compliance with that Act, unless the party charged thereby proves that any further information was practically required for the purpose of taxation, or shows that the name of the ct. in which the business was done would have been of use to him. The reason for requiring the name of the ct. to be stated, which prevailed under the 2 Geo. 3, c. 23, does not exist since Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), & since the scale of allowances has become uniform in all the superior cts. of law.

(2) Semble : a bill of costs which is defective as to part of the items contained in it may be good as to the residue, so as to entitle the attorney to recover the amount as to which a sufficient bill of costs has been delivered.

(3) Semble : the true meaning of the statute is that a debt., who undertakes to prove that a bill is not a bond fide compliance with the Act, cannot found an objection upon want of information in the bill, if it appears that he is already in possession of that information.—COOK v. GILLARD (1852), 1 E. & B. 26 ; 22 L. J. Q. B. 90 ; 20 L. T. O. S. 205 ; 17 Jur. 137 ; 118 E. R. 316.

1482. — Reasonable information—To enable solicitor to advise client.]—(1) An attorney's bill of costs, delivered under Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 37, is sufficient if it gives such reasonable information to the client as will enable him to take advice as to its taxation, & it need not be so explicit on the face of it as to enable an attorney at once to say, without further inquiry, whether the charges are proper.

1483. — To enable taxing master to exercise discretion.]—(1) Although it is well settled law that the ct. will not interfere with the exercise of a discretion by a taxing master where he has not acted on any wrong principle or applied any wrong consideration, yet where the ct. is satisfied that the bill brought in for taxation does not contain the necessary materials to enable him reasonably to exercise his discretion it will direct the bill to be amended & the taxing master to review his taxation of the bill so amended.

(2) In order to enable a taxing master to form a considered judgment as to the sum that is proper to be allowed under the heading "instructions for brief" the bill of costs carried in for taxation should contain under that heading a summary statement of the details of the matters to which regard is to be had. It should state the length of the documents to be perused, in cases in which perusal has not been previously charged, the names of the witnesses who have been attended, the places to which journeys have been made with the time occupied in each, & the amount of travelling expenses.—*SLINGSBY v. 1489. Cash account — Items appearing as "cash."]—A solr. acted for a client in the administration of her father's estate & business. He also acted as her personal solr. & professionally in other family matters with which she was concerned. In a cash account which the solr. delivered several items appeared as "cash" merely. The client claimed that a further & better "cash account" should be rendered alleging that the items in question were insufficient to enable her to indemnify the payments so as to appropriate them to the different accounts, but the application was refused by the judge in chambers:—Held: as it was the practice of the taxing officers to accept cash accounts in this form, subject to their being properly vouched at a later date, & it was shown that justice could thus be done between the parties, the refusal of the application was a matter of discretion, & the ct. would not interfere with the order made by the judge at chambers.—Re HARMAN (1915), 59 Sol. 1490. Whether heading to bill essential.]—Deft., the surveyor of highways of the parish of L., retained pltf. to defend an indictment against the parish for the non-repair of a highway. Pending the proceedings deft. ceased to be surveyor, & a new surveyor was appointed. In a correspondence between deft. & pltf. as to the costs of the indictment, the deft. requested pltf. to send his bill of costs to the new surveyor. Pltf. sent by post his bill of costs to deft. in the following letter: "Herewith you have my bill of costs in the L. matter. I have sent a copy to the surveyor of the parish of L." The bill was headed, "The surveyor of the highways of the township of L. & the inhabitants of the parish, debtors to C.," pltf.:—Held: as the Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 36, does not require any heading to an attorney's bill, the requisites of that Act were complied with, since the bill & the letter sufficiently notified to deft. that he was the party to be charged.

No particular form of heading being prescribed by Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), as essential to an attorney's bill of costs, if the bill be sent with a letter & the party to whom it is sent knows that it is intended to charge him, it is sufficient within the requirements of the sect.—*CHAMP v. All that the statute requires is, that the heading of the bill should indicate the party to be charged. 1529. ———.]—Under an order that the costs, charges & expenses of a retiring liquidator should be taxed & provided for, he carried in a bill showing disbursements & professional charges in separate columns. Amongst the latter he included & gave credit for two bills of party & party costs which had been taxed some time previously & paid to him by a third party. The registrar, on the ground that they had already been paid, struck out these items, with the result that the total amount of the costs was diminished. He proceeded to tax the bill on the footing that it must be treated as a whole & the disbursements & professional charges added together; & he thus reduced it by more than one-sixth. Items for drawing the bill of costs & attending the taxation were accordingly disallowed:—Held: the bills for party & party costs were properly included, & ought not to have been struck out of the bill; & for the purpose of ascertaining whether one-sixth had been taxed off the bill the amount of the professional charges only, omitting the disbursements, must be taken into consideration.—Re MERCANTILE LIGHTERAGE CO., LTD., [1906] 1 Ch. 491; 75 L. That bill having been taxed, deft. paid to pltfs. the amount allowed upon the taxation. Pltfs. then delivered to deft. a bill in respect of the extra costs of the proceedings on the petition as between solr. & client, which bill did not contain the items allowed in respect of party & party costs. This bill not being paid, pltfs. sued deft. for the amount of it as for necessities supplied to the wife:—Held: the bill was not a sufficient bill within Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 37, & therefore the action was not maintainable.

I can see no reason why a solr.'s bill may not be delivered in parts, or why successive bills, respectively showing the costs due down to a certain date, or including particular groups of items, may not be delivered, provided that it clearly appears that they are all really parts of one bill (FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J.).—*COBBETT v. 1533. Distinction between professional & non-professional disbursements—Professional disbursements included in bill—Non-professional in cash account.]—The costs of taxation depend on whether one-sixth is taken off the bill of costs; & to determine this, a distinction is to be made between strictly professional charges & disbursements & independent cash payments.

Such payments as a solr. may make in the due discharge of his duty which he has undertaken as solr., whether the client furnish him with the money for the purpose or not, ought to be allowed him as professional disbursements, such as fees to officers of ct. & counsel, etc., but payments which the solr. is not bound to make, such as purchase-money, interest thereon, etc., are not within the rule, & ought properly to be charged in a cash account; & such latter payments are not to be affected by the existence or non-existence of a cash account for other purposes.

Where, therefore, a solr. paid a bill of costs for which his client, in an action for which the client had employed another solr., had become liable:—Held: the sum so paid, not being paid in performance of the solr.'s professional duties, nor in his professional character, ought not to be allowed as a disbursement in the bill of costs; & it properly formed an item of a cash account.—Re REMNANT (1849), 11 Beav. 603; 18 L. 1545. — On presentation of bankruptcy petition.—In taxing a bill of costs under Solicitors Act, the taxing Master has no jurisdiction to substitute, for an item admittedly not chargeable, an item properly chargeable but omitted from the bill; for that in fact is altering the bill, which can only be done on a proper application to the ct. But he can correct an error in the casting of the bill, although it alters the amount, for that is not taxation, but arithmetic.

But the £5 deposit paid into ct. under Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, r. 147, on the presentation of a bkpcy. petition is, by r. 112 (1), of the same rules & the scale of costs thereunder, properly entered as a disbursement in a solr.'s bill of costs, & does not fall within the principle of Re Buckwell & Berkeley, No. 1544, ante.—Re GRANT, BULCRAIG & Co., [1906] 1 Ch. 124; 75 L. 1555. Professional fees paid on behalf of client—Expense authorised by client.—A party attached for contempt in an ecclesiastical ct. employed a common law attorney to procure his discharge. At the time of doing so, he ascertained, in company with the attorney, what the costs in the ecclesiastical ct. would probably amount to, & authorised him to employ a proctor & to pay what might be necessary. The attorney employed a proctor who did the business required & settled with the adverse proctor, whose charges on that occasion were objected to & reduced. The attorney paid the bill of the proctor retained by him, having first examined the charges & had them inspected, though not regularly taxed, by the taxing officer of the ecclesiastical ct., who thought them reasonable. He afterwards delivered his own bill to the client, containing items amounting to £9 for his own charges & £14 for the proctor's & other charges in the ecclesiastical ct. The master taxed off £2 from the former items but declined taxing the latter; & he included the whole in his allocatur:—Held: (1) the costs in the ecclesiastical ct. were properly included in the bill as disbursements by the attorney; (2) under the circumstances it was not necessary to refer them back to the master 1556. Payments made to witnesses—Allowances received as agent for client.]—Where an attorney for a prosecution receives the allowance by the county for the witnesses' expenses he does so as the agent & not as the attorney of the prosecutor. He has not therefore any right to include the payments made to the witnesses as disbursements on behalf of his client, though he gives credit for the receipt of the same sum. Nor will he be allowed to charge him with any payments made to the witnesses beyond those allowances, unless there be an express authority or sanction for such on the part of the prosecutor.—EDKINS v. The question whether the items are expenses that ought to be allowed as between the local authority & the ratepayers does not arise on such a taxation, but is a matter for the auditor under Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), ss. 247, 249.—Re PORTER, AMPHLETT & JONES, [1912] 2 Ch. 98; 81 L. The letter stated that the unpaid items consisted of counsel's fees & printers' charges of which it gave the respective totals:—Held: even assuming that the letter could be read as part of it, the bill did not "set out such unpaid items or disbursements under a separate heading in the bill" within R. 1561. ——— Fees paid before commencement of taxation.]—By R. S. C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (29A), in taxations under above Act, of a solr.'s fees, charges & disbursements, no such disbursements shall be allowed which have not been actually made before delivery of the bill of costs, unless the bill shall expressly state that they have not been made, & shall set out the unpaid items of disbursements under a separate heading in the bill, in which case they may be allowed if they are actually made before the commencement of the proceedings in which the taxation takes place & are made in discharge of an antecedent liability of the solr., including counsel's fees, properly incurred on behalf of the client: Provided that if the proceedings for taxation shall have been commenced by the client or a third party, payments made by the solr. pending such proceedings in discharge of any such antecedent liability so set out in the bill, including counsel's fees, may be allowed if actually made before the commencement of the taxation.

A solr. issued a specially indorsed writ & a summons for judgment against his client upon a bill of costs. On Mar. 23, 1921, an order was made under Ord. 14 that the bill should be referred to the master to be taxed pursuant to above Act & that the solr. should be at liberty to sign judgment against the client for the amount found due to the solr. by the master's allocatur. The bill expressly stated that certain fees to counsel had not been paid, & these fees were set out under a separate heading in the bill as indicated by R. S. C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (29A). On Apr. 1, 1921, the fees were paid. On Apr. 9, 1921, the taxation commenced. The client objected to the fees being allowed as disbursements, & the taxing master upheld the objection:—Held: the order of Mar. 23 represented the result of two proceedings: (a) a summons for judgment by the solr.; (b) a summons by the client for taxation of the bill under above sect.; therefore "proceedings for taxation" had been "commenced by the client" within R. S. C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (29A), & consequently that the taxing master had power to allow the fees.—SMITH v. HOWES, [1922] 1 K. B. 590; 91 L. J. K. B. 388; 126 L. T. 625; 66 Sol. Jo. 367, C. A.

A lady was involved in litigation with certain moneylenders. Her son was finding the money for the costs thereof. The lady & her son were being advised by different solrs. The son's solr. prepared the brief in the litigation & the lady's solr. perused & approved it. The litigation was settled, & the lady recovered certain property. Her solr. then applied for a charging order on the property recovered for his costs, charges, & expenses, & obtained by consent an order that his bill of costs as then delivered should be taxed & an undertaking that the amount found due should be paid. The bill of costs contained (a) a sum for counsel's fees which had not then been paid, & (b) a sum for preparing the brief in the litigation. Upon taxation of the bill:—Held: the counsel's fees, which were paid during the taxation, should be allowed as costs, charges, & expenses, though not paid before the commencement of the taxation, but that the sum for preparing the brief should not be allowed.—Re EDEN, WATKINS v. 1563. ——— R. S. C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (29A) not applicable.—Pltf. deposited two leases with resp., his solr., & by a written instrument charged his interest in the two messuages comprised therein as security for the repayment of certain sums advanced to him by resp., & for all costs, charges & disbursements incurred by him in an action for pltf. An order was made for an account of what was due to the resp. under the deposit & agreement. Various bills were delivered, some of which were directed to be taxed & two were referred to be moderated. In one of these there were included as disbursements counsels' fees to the amount of £22. These had not been paid, but there was no note to that effect, nor were they set out under a separate heading in the bill in accordance with above regulation. The fees were in fact paid before the bill was submitted for moderation, & were ultimately allowed by the taxing master. On a summons by pltf. to vary the report of the taxing master :—Held : above regulation only applied to a taxation under above Act & according to Re Eden, Watkins v. Eden, No. 1562, ante, was held not to extend to a taxation of the costs, charges, & expenses of a solr. applying for a charging order under Solicitors Act, 1860 (c. 127) ; nor could it apply to the case of moderation of a bill which was not the same as taxation ; therefore there was here no taxation under Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), or otherwise, & the summons would be dismissed with costs.—GOODCHILD v. 1572. ——— When charges reduced or increased.—(1) In an action by a solr. for work done the particulars were described as having been delivered to defts. in a signed bill of costs more than a month before action brought. Defts. denied liability, & also relied upon the fact that pltf. had delivered a prior bill of costs for a less amount. The jury found for pltf. on the question of liability, & a verdict was entered for him, but leave was refused to carry in the second bill for taxation. On appeal :—Held : pltf. was not bound by the first bill delivered, & although, by reason of the proviso in Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 37, in the absence of special circumstances, there could be no reference to taxation under that Act after verdict, the ct. had jurisdiction to refer the matter to a taxing master, who would be entitled to take both bills into his consideration in arriving at the amount for which judgment should be entered.

I am far from saying that defts. have not shown a certain amount of authority for the proposition that the rule applied in the case of taxation under Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), & the obligation on a solr. who has delivered a bill of costs to obtain leave before he can bring in a second bill for taxation, is a rule applicable not only in the case of the second bill being a reduction of the amount claimed in the first, but also to the case where it increases that amount. That seems to me to be right (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS L.J.).

(2) A solr. may amend bona fide his bill of costs at any time before an order of taxation has been obtained or taxation has been threatened by the client.

(3) Semble : although the taxing master, acting as a referee, would bring to bear upon the question the principles of taxation, yet all the principles applicable to taxation of a bill of costs would not necessarily apply, e.g. the rule that the solr. must pay the costs of taxation if one-sixth part of the bill be taxed off.—LUMSDEN v. A firm of solrs., on being pressed by their clients to send in their bills of cost, delivered a bill accompanied by a letter saying that there were certain charges which, owing to haste, had not been included in the bill, but that they were willing to accept a stated sum in full discharge, though if such sum was not paid within eight days, they reserved to themselves the right to withdraw the bill & deliver another. The clients, however, insisting on being furnished with the particulars of further charges, the solrs. wrote withdrawing the bill. The solrs., in pursuance of that order, delivered a second bill, but of a considerably less amount than the first, whereupon the clients appealed to reverse that order & to have it declared that the bill to be taxed was that first delivered:—Held: (1) discharging the last-mentioned order, the first bill was conditional, but the condition was one which a solr. could not impose on his client, & therefore the original common order for taxation must stand; (2) the clients should under the circumstances, instead of obtaining the common order to tax, have obtained a special order on petition raising the question as to the right of the solrs. to withdraw their bill, they were therefore allowed no costs of the proceedings in the ct. below, but only the costs of the appeal.—Re THOMPSON (1885), 30 Ch. 1646. Bill must be the delivered bill.—(1) C., a solr., sent in to exors. a bill of costs for £83, writing at the foot, "say £78," & the £78 was paid. The residuary legatee obtained an order to tax the bill, which was taxed at £66, being more than five-sixths of £78, but less than five-sixths of £83. The residuary legatee objected to certain items as excessive, & the taxing master considered that they were excessive, but held, that, as the exors. had authorised them & admitted their liability to pay them, the residuary legatee could not have them reduced. The judge held that the taxing master was right in allowing these items; that the bill must be treated as a bill for £78, from which less than one-sixth had been taxed off, & that the solr. was entitled to the costs of the reference:—Held: the bill delivered, within Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 37, was a bill for £83, & as more than one-sixth had been taxed off, the solr. must, according to that sect., pay the costs of the reference; the case not coming within the proviso giving the ct. a discretion where special circumstances are certified.

(2) P., a solr. delivered a bill for £362, but stated that he would only claim £320, & the £320 only was entered in the cash account which he delivered to his clients. The clients obtained an order for taxation. The taxing master taxed the bill at £820, being more than five-sixths of £320, but less than five-sixths of £362, & certified that he had allowed the solr. the costs of the reference, as he considered that since he had never claimed more than £320, the difference of £42 between this sum & the amount of the whole bill, ought to be reduced from the sums taxed off, thus reducing them to £40, which was less than a sixth of the sum he had claimed:—Held: special circumstances were certified, so as to give the ct. a discretion as to the costs of the reference, but the special circumstances were not such as to induce the ct. to depart from the general rule that the costs of the reference should follow the event of the taxation, & in this case also, more than one-sixth having been taxed off the £362, the solr. must pay the costs of the reference.

lesser sum refused.—Where a solr. has offered to take in full settlement less than the amount of a bill of costs as rendered, & has made the offer in a manner unequivocal & binding upon him, then & not otherwise he is to be allowed the benefit of the offer upon taxation if the client reject it & proceed to tax the bill.—Re ALLISON (1886), 12 P. 1744. —By an agreement, dated July 15, 1885, the W. Local Board agreed with the Earl of Litchfield & Lord Anson, his eldest son, for the purchase of land, part of their entailed estates, at a price to be fixed by arbn. The agreement contained a clause that the local board should pay all the costs of the reference to arbn. The arbn. took place & the purchase was completed. The vendors' solrs. sent in their bill of costs to the board, & the board obtained the usual order for taxation on the petition of a third party liable to pay under Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 38, which provides that the third party shall stand in the same position as the original client. The order for taxation, which was in the common form, contained a recital that petitioners submitted to pay what should be found due upon taxation. The bill of costs contained a number of heavy fees paid to eminent surveyors who had been called as witnesses for the vendors at the arbn. The local board objected to these payments as excessive. The taxing master at first marked them for reduction, but, on the vendors' solrs. producing a letter from Lord Anson stating that he had acted for his father in the matter, & had authorised the calling of the surveyors in question, & approved the payments made to them, the taxing master held that he was precluded from reducing the items. The local board took out a summons to review the taxation:—Held: by taking the usual third-party order for taxation under Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 38, the local board had precluded themselves from taking any objection to the bill of costs, which could not have been taken by the vendors; & though by the agreement the board were only bound to pay reasonable costs, they could not, on taxation, object to anything authorised by the 1745. Taxation as between solicitor & client.—The rule that the taxation of a bill under the third-party clause, Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 38, is as between solr. & client, is subject to this limitation, that a solr. cannot charge against a trust estate anything not necessary for the administration thereof, though expressly directed by the trustee; but must look for payment of such charges to the trustee personally.

Where a cestui que trust had obtained an order under Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 39, to tax the bill of costs of his trustees' solr., & the bill was so taxed as to render the solr. liable for the costs of the taxation, & after that the solr. appealed therefrom:—Held: the taxing master must be allowed to exercise his discretion as to the allowance or disallowance of particular items; the fact of the business being trust business could not be disregarded.—Re BROWN (1867), L. The co. subsequently obtained an order of course under Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 38, the third-party section, for the taxation of the bill. On motion to discharge the order:—Held: the undertaking was one to pay party & party costs, Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 38, referred only to the taxation of solr. & client costs, the co. were not third parties within the sect., & the order was therefore irregular & must be discharged with costs.

1772. ———.]—On Aug. 3, 1894, R. commenced an action against W., his son & partner, for dissolution of partnership. Notice of motion for a receiver was given, but stood over pending negotiations for a settlement until Aug. 22. A draft agreement for settlement was sent on Aug. 15, by pltf.'s solrs. to deft.'s solrs., containing among other clauses the following: "The cost of the action & of this agreement & of the notice of dissolution for the London Gazette, shall be paid by W." On Aug. 17, pltf.'s solrs. sent to deft.'s solrs. a draft bill of costs for £48 19s. with an explanatory letter saying that they were sent in order that deft.'s solrs. might peruse them before completion, & the amount agreed upon might be inserted in the agreement. On Aug. 21, the parties and their solrs. met, & the agreement was signed by pltf. & deft. with the words "Such costs being agreed at £45," added at the end of the draft clause set out above. The action was abandoned according to the agreement, & on Aug. 27, W. obtained the common order to tax the bill so delivered. Pltf.'s solrs. moved to discharge this order. It was alleged at the hearing of the motion that the amount was agreed under pressure:—Held: the sending the bill under the circumstances stated was not a delivery of a bill within the meaning of the Attorneys & Solicitors Acts, & whatever might have been W.'s rights to have a bill delivered & taxed on a special application, he was not entitled to the common order to tax, & this order must be discharged with costs.—Re HULBERT & CROWE (1894), 71 L. 1774. Mortgagor—Taxation as between original parties.]—A mtgee.'s solr. would not part with the deeds until payment of his bill of costs, which had been delivered to the mtgor.'s solr. a month previously:—Held: this was not a sufficient case of pressure to induce the ct. to order a taxation.

A mtgor. has not a right to have the bills of the mtgee.'s solr. taxed upon different principles from those which would be applied to the taxation of the same bill, upon the petition of the mtgee.

Payment of a solr.'s bill, delivered at the last moment of settling a mtgee., being insisted on, without any opportunity of examination being afforded, is a "special circumstance," within Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73).—Re JONES (1845), 8 Beav. 479; 50 E. R. 188.

1776. ———.]—It requires a very special case to induce the ct. to order taxation after payment, the ct. being reluctant to open a matter deliberately settled. The rule is that there must be both pressure & overcharges, or items in the bill itself of such a nature as to amount to what is vaguely called fraud.

The doctrine of pressure, in cases of taxation after payment, is not to be extended, & the application for taxation should be made speedily.

Where a mtgor. seeks the taxation of the bill of the mtgee.'s solr., it must be looked at, not as between the mtgor. & the solr., but as between the solr. & his client, the mtgee.

Where a considerable portion of a bill of costs is for business, which, in the exercise of an honest & fair discretion, ought never to have been transacted, the ct., although there be no serious amount of pressure, will order a taxation after payment.—Re BARROW (1853), 17 Beav. 547; 24 L. But if reasonable facilities for taxation have been refused at the last moment, when it has become imperative to the party to obtain immediately the papers to which the solr.'s lien applied, & the party has consequently paid the bill, that is a special circumstance which, coupled with items of apparent overcharge, will justify the ct. in directing taxation after payment.

An order was made to tax the bill "upon the terms of the agreement dated May 31, 1865":—Held: this reference to the agreement was erroneous, for that the order must be to tax the bill which W. had paid, without anything to limit the bill to that which would be the proper bill as between G. & T. & W.—Re NEWMAN (1867), 2 Ch. Where a cestui que trust applies for taxation, then if there has been no payment, the rules under which taxation is to be directed are such as are pointed out by Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 37, & if there has been payment, by sect. 41.

Whenever Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), applies, the ct. cannot in any case whatever send a bill for taxation as against the solr., if it has been paid more than twelve months, but the ct. may, after that period, direct a taxation as between a trustee & his cestui que trust, to justify the payments of the former.

The words "any such bill," in sect. 41, do not mean the bill mentioned in the sect. immediately preceding, viz., any bill "previously taxed & settled"; nor are they limited to such bills as under the provisions of the Act are sought to be taxed by a party directly chargeable.

Semble: where a solr.'s bill has been paid by a trustee, the cestui que trust cannot after the expiration of twelve months from payment, obtain a taxation, as against the solr., although he had no notice of the payment until after the twelve months had expired.—Re DOWNES (1844), 5 Beav. 425; 13 L. T., who acted as the solr. in the matter, brought an action against C. for the amount of his bill of costs. C. paid into ct. the amount subscribed by him, & pleaded to the action. Subsequently C. presented a petition, & obtained an order of course for taxation. The petition did not contain a submission to pay, nor the order any direction to the taxing master to state the amount due from C. to T. On a motion to discharge this order with costs:—Held: an order on a petition presented under such circumstances was not of course; where taxation was asked & the retainer disputed, a special application & order were necessary; such an order was now offered to the

1833. Where previous order obtained—Order of course proving abortive—By default of solicitor.]—An action having been commenced by a solr. against his client to recover the amount of his bill of costs, the client obtained the common order at the Rolls for a taxation. The taxing master recommended the parties to come to an arrangement between themselves, & for that purpose proposed to adjourn the taxation, & in the event of the negotiations failing to give another appointment. Proposals were made on both sides, & not accepted, & four days after the solr. had submitted his offer to the client having elapsed without a reply, he proceeded to sign judgment in his action. The time limited by the order of course having then expired, the client presented a special petition for taxation, & an order to that effect was made at the Rolls, & in effect, appealed against:—Held: the decision was right, & the appeal failed, inasmuch as the special petition was rendered necessary, not by any fault of the client but by the solrs. having departed from the understanding come to by the parties before the taxing master.—Re CATTIN (1857), 30 L. 1834. — — —.]—By default of client.]—On Oct. 21, 1893, a client obtained the common order of course to tax a bill of costs, which had been delivered to him by his solrs. on May 10, 1893, & also to tax another bill alleged to have been delivered on Oct. 27, 1892. On Nov. 29, 1893, the taxing master gave notice that he had fixed Dec. 7 for the taxation. The parties attended on that day, & the taxing master then held that the alleged bill of Oct. 27, 1892, was not really a bill of costs, but was only a list of disbursements, & that, as the order directed him to tax two bills, & there was in fact only one, he could not under the order tax that one. On a subsequent application to tax the solrs.' costs of the abortive order, the master held that the order had become inoperative, because he had not extended the time fixed by the order for the making of his certificate, & that he had no jurisdiction to order the client to pay the costs of the proceedings. But he intimated that it would be fair for the client to pay the solrs. £2 2s. The solrs. then acting for the client afterwards offered to pay that sum, & while the original solrs. were considering whether they would accept the offer, a second order of course was obtained to tax the bill of May 10, 1893. This order was obtained without any mention of the former order. On a motion by the solrs. to discharge this order:—Held: the order had been irregularly obtained, & after the first order had become abortive, the promissory note for the amount of his bill, which is ultimately paid, the twelve months limited by Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 41, for taxation of the bill after payment, date from the time when the bill or note was paid, not when it was originally given, unless there be circumstances to show that it was treated by the parties as actual payment at the time when given.—Re HARRIES (1844), 13 M. & W. 3; 1 Dow. & L. 1018; 13 L. J. Ex. 259; 3 L. T. O. S. 138; 8 Jur. 453; 153 E. R. 1.

Annotation:—Consd. Re Sanders, Ex p. Wagstaff, Sayer v. Wagstaff (1844), 14 L. J. Ch. 116.

1920. ———.]—(1) The delivery by a client of a promissory note, held, under the circumstances, to amount to a payment of a bill of costs.

(2) The special circumstances under which a paid bill may be taxed are such as exist or take place at the time of payment, or such as appear on the face of the bills themselves: (a) where payment is extorted, & there are improper charges even of a small amount, or (b) where the charges are so gross as to evidence fraud & oppression, taxation will be directed after payment.

(3) It is imprudent for a client to pay, & for a solr. to receive, his bill of costs, so closely upon their delivery, that they cannot have been deliberately & carefully perused & examined by the client; but this alone is not sufficient to warrant a taxation after payment.—Re CURRIE (1846), 9 Beav. 602; 1 New Pract. Cas. 549; 8 L. T. O. S. 310; 10 Jur. 976; 50 E. R. 476.

1921. ———. Promissory note.—SAYER v. WAGSTAFF, No. 2152, post.

1922. ———. Accompanied by memorandum of lien.—(1) A solr., at the request of his client, delivered certain bills, accompanied by a cash account; & at a subsequent meeting, the client, without any pressure other than the influence arising from his want of money to meet so large a demand as appeared on the balance, signed a promissory note for the amount, & also a memorandum of lien on his real estates for the same by way of security to the solr. The client had had sufficient time to examine the bills, & the solr. had not asked for payment. On a petition for an order to tax:—Held: the promissory note & memorandum amounted, under the circumstances, to payment; as the petition was not presented within the year after payment, the order for taxation could not be made.

(2) There being only general complaints of numerous overcharges & unreasonable items, but no specific items pointed out as erroneous, & the petition being presented more than a year after delivery:—Held: the special circumstances were not such as to justify taxation, even if the bill had not been paid.—Re HARPER (1847), 10 Beav. 284; 2 New Pract. Cas. 336; 10 L. T. O. S. 33; 50 E. R. 591.

1924. ———. Effect of subsequent dishonour.—(1) An attorney had delivered a bill in 1840 & continued to act as attorney afterwards. In 1842 the client, being pressed for payment, demanded a statement of his account, & gave two joint notes of hand, which the attorney swore he received "in lien of cash." The attorney, after these notes became due & were paid, delivered two other bills, comprising some of the items, & extending over a portion of the time included in the first. On motion to refer the bills for taxation:—Held: the three bills together constituting in point of fact but one bill, "the payment of any such bill" within Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 41, so as to preclude taxation after the lapse of twelve months must be a payment after the delivery of the whole of such bills.

(2) Semble: the mere delivery of a bill of exchange or promissory note is not a payment within that section, when, if the bill of exchange or promissory note were dishonoured at maturity, the client would remain liable on the attorney's bill.—Re PEACH (1844), 2 Dow. & L. 33; 13 L. J. Q. B. 249; 8 Jur. 692.

1925. ———.]—The handing by a client to his solr. of a negotiable security for the amount of his bill of costs, coupled with the giving of a receipt by the solr. in which it is expressed to be taken "in settlement" of his bill, does not amount to payment in the event of the negotiable security being dishonoured, unless there be proof, the onus of which lies on the solr., that such was at the time the intention of the parties, & that the client was aware of the effect of the transaction upon his right to tax the bill of costs.—Re ROMER & HASLAM, [1893] 2 Q. 1926. ———.]—Pltf., having acted as solr. to deft., delivered to him a bill of costs, & deft. signed two promissory notes in payment. The first of the notes to become due was dishonoured. In an action on the note deft. contended that he was entitled to have the bill taxed before paying the note:—Held: without deciding whether deft. had a right to taxation, pltf. was entitled to judgment on the note for the amount claimed, & if deft. applied for taxation & was held entitled to it he might, when the other note fell due, have a defence to the extent of any sum deducted from the bill.—*STEWART-MOORE v. (2) Letters written by a solr. to his client which are not properly required for the interests of the client in the business for which the solr. is engaged will not be allowed on taxation.

On June 29, 1850 he sent a copy of the bill to the solr. of the mtgor., & on June 27,

Sect. 5.—Taxation of costs: Sub-sect. 3, C. (a) iii. & iv.]

1851 the mtgor., applied for an order for taxation:—Held: the taxation might have been had upon the common order; the petition was presented in time; it could scarcely be considered a payment of the bill of costs until petitioner had the means of knowing the amount of the surplus, & he was entitled to taxation, but he must pay the costs beyond the costs of the common order.—Re STEELE (1851), 20 L. J. Ch. 562.

1937. — Retainer with client's assent.]—In an action by a client against his solr., the latter pleaded his bill of costs by way of set-off. The client obtained an order for the delivery of the bill & suffered himself to be non prossed:—Held: it was not necessary to state these circumstances on an ex p. application in Chancery for taxation.

There being in this case no bill delivered, & no payment in the proper sense of the term which means either a payment of the money or a retainer of the amount by the solr. with the assent of the client, I think this must be treated like any other case, & that the client was entitled to the order of course (ROMILLY, M.R.).—Re DAVID (1861), 30 Beav. 278; 54 E. R. 896.

1938. — Where no bill of costs delivered.]—Testator gave a legacy to a person payable at a future day; when the day arrived, the legatee was believed to be dead, but it was not known whether he had died intestate or not. The legacy was invested, & a solr., not the exor. of testator, or in any way connected with him, became the obligee of the bond to secure it. The solr. then took the usual steps to obtain information & to ascertain whether or not the legatee was dead; but being unsuccessful, he demanded a bond of indemnity before paying over the legacy to the next of kin of the legatee, who had taken out administration to him, on the supposition that he was dead, & alleging that his bill of costs amounted to a lump sum, of which the particulars were not stated, nor was any bill delivered, he deducted that sum from the legacy & handed over the balance to the next of kin of deceased legatee:—Held: no particulars being stated, nor bill delivered, & the solr. who had constituted himself a trustee having made professional charges for his trouble in making the enquiries which were all objected to, the bill was taxable notwithstanding payment or retainer of moneys in payment.—Re FOULKES & PARKER (1847), 2 New Pract. Cas. 491.

1939. — —.]—A solr. retained the amount of his bill of costs out of money in his hands belonging to the client, & the client, on receiving the balance of the money, but before the bill of costs had been delivered, signed an account in which the total amount of the costs was an item, & gave a receipt for the balance:—Held: (1) there had been no payment of the bill within Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 41; & the client was entitled to have the bill taxed more than a year after the retainer of the costs & the signature of the account; (2) a special application was necessary under the circumstances.

(3) If bills relating to different parts of one transaction are delivered at different times, the year within which application for taxation should be made does not begin to run till the last has been delivered.—Re STREETER (1870), L. R. 10 Eq. 165; 39 L. J. Ch. 495; 22 L. T. 429.

A solr. lent his client £200 on a promissory note. The note was made out for £210, the addition being alleged to be for costs on the transaction:—Held: the client was not precluded from requiring a bill of costs, showing how the £10 was made up, by the lapse of nearly three years & subsequent money transactions between the parties.—Re CAWLEY & WHATLEY (1870), 18 W. R. 1125.

1941. — —.]—From Feb. 1874, to Aug. 1879, S. had acted as the solr. & man of business of B., a married woman, & during this period had wound up her former husband's estate, collected her rents, & managed her estates, lent her money, & negotiated mtges. for her. In the course of these transactions the various items of receipt & payment on her behalf, including costs & professional charges, were entered in a book of accounts kept by S. Copies of these accounts were sent to B. from time to time, & one of the mtges. by B. to S. contained a recital that they had been gone through & settled. In Aug. 1879, when a mtge. was negotiated from a third person of sufficient amount to pay off B.'s debt to S., the accounts were gone through & explained to B., when S. retained the amount due to him for advances & for his costs & professional charges out of the mtge. money, & carried the balance to her credit in the book of accounts. B. thereupon signed the account. S. continued to act for B. as before down to the end of 1885. B. had no independent advice when she signed the account in Aug. 1879. On an application by B. & her husband for the delivery & consequent taxation of bills of costs from Feb. 1874, to Aug. 1879:—Held: there had been no payment within Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 41, & B. was entitled to an order for delivery of proper bills of costs for the period required, & a consequent taxation, notwithstanding the lapse of time & the signature by B. of the accounts.—Re STOGDON (1887), 56 L. 1942. — —.]—(1) To constitute payment of a bill of costs such as will preclude taxation after twelve months under Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 41, a proper bill with items must be delivered; a cash account debiting the client with a lump sum for costs is insufficient.

(2) A solr. who pays himself by retention of moneys of his client, & does not deliver a bill of costs, cannot treat that retention as payment; & such retention will not be referred to a bill subsequently delivered under an order of the ct.

(3) A cash account containing an item for "costs as agreed" does not, where it is admitted that there was an antecedent verbal agreement, constitute an agreement in writing within Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881 (c. 44), s. 8.

(4) Delay in applying for delivery of a bill will not relieve the solr. from the obligation to deliver a bill where he has in his possession the necessary

(b) A settled account, though coupled with the retainer of agreed costs, it is not "payment" as between solr. & client unless a proper bill is delivered.

1944. — When treated by client as payment.—The lady has treated the money paid to her as the balance due, & assented to the solr. keeping or retaining the amount of his bill. There is no distinction in law between a solr. & his client & any other person & his customer in the matter of payment. Special circumstances within Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 41, are not confined to pressure or overcharge, or any particular kind of circumstances (CHITTY, J.).—Re COLYER (1892), 37 Sol. 1945. — Bill of costs delivered subsequent to retainer.—A firm of solrs. retained, out of money in their hands belonging to their client, the amount of their costs for professional work. They kept a running account with the client, crediting him with money received, & debiting him from time to time with the amount of the costs. The accounts were from time to time balanced, & signed by the client as having been "settled & approved" by him, but no bills of costs were then delivered. Four years after the last settlement of accounts the client brought an action for an account. The solrs. then delivered their bills of costs. At the trial pltf. abandoned his claim for an account, but contended that he was entitled to have the bills taxed:—Held: the payment made was referable to the bills subsequently delivered, the case came within Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 41, & there being no special circumstances, the ct. would not direct taxation.—*HITCHCOCK v. 1952. — Settlement of bill during action.—Where client has no professional advice.]—A settlement of a bill of costs during the continuance of the suit, while the client has no professional adviser, except the solr. himself, is not a bar to its taxation. Charges by a country solr. for attending the cause in London are to be allowed in some cases; but the circumstance of their being undertaken by the direction of the client, is not alone a sufficient ground for allowing them, as the solr. himself is better able to judge of their necessity.—*CROSSLEY v. A solr. from time to time rendered to his client a debtor & creditor cash account, & his draft unsigned bill of costs for contentious business. On each occasion the client waived the delivery of a signed bill & discussed & agreed the amount of the draft bill, which amount was then debited against him in the cash account & a balance was struck, & the client wrote at the foot of the cash account "I agree this account" & signed it. On the third occasion the client gave the solr. a mtge. for the agreed balance of the stated cash account, which for the main part represented the agreed sum for costs, & covenanted to pay it with interest. More than twelve months afterwards the client became bkpt., & the solr. claimed to prove for the principal & interest due under the covenant in the mtge. less the value of the security, & he also claimed to prove for the same principal sum on an account stated:—Held: as between the debtor & the solr., the carrying of the agreed sum for costs into the cash account & the subsequent 1964. — Giving mortgage.]—(1) Where a bill of costs has been delivered & security given for the amount, that is equivalent to payment, for the purpose of precluding taxation without special circumstances.

After the delivery of a solr.'s bill, & on the occasion of a purchase by the client, & of a mortgage to raise part of the purchase-money, which the client required in order to complete the purchase, the client executed a mtge. to the solr. for a round sum, which included & exceeded by a small amount the bill of costs & the amount of certain advances made formerly by the solr. to the client. Some time afterwards, the client applied for & received the excess, & subsequently the mtge. was transferred, with the client's concurrence:—Held: this amounted to payment of the bill, so as to preclude taxation without further special circumstances than the above.

(2) Where a solr. pressed for the amount of his bill, but offered an opportunity of taxation, & apprised his client that it would be difficult to have the bill taxed after payment, & the client chose to pay without taxation, & afterwards applied to have the bill taxed without showing overcharges amounting to fraud:—Held: the application ought to have been dismissed with costs.—*Re BOYLE, Ex p. A petition for taxation presented by the cestui que trust in Jan. following was dismissed with costs.—Re NEATE (1847), 10 Beav. 181; 50 E. R. 551.

"Protest" at the time of payment of a bill of costs, means merely that the party is dissatisfied, & will apply to have the bill taxed; but the party does not thereby acquire or reserve to himself any right to have it taxed, unless there are special circumstances.

2014. ———.]—Mtgees. for £2,000 were proceeding to sell the mtged. estates. On Sept. 1, S., the mtgor.'s solr., wrote to B., the mtgee.'s solr., informing him that he had found a transferee, & proposing to complete the transfer on Sept. 3. B. wrote back proposing Sept. 10, for completion, & afterwards postponed the appointment to Sept. 13. His bill of costs, which amounted with surveyor's charges to more than £450, was received by S. on Sept. 9. On that day S. wrote to B., saying that the bill of costs appearing excessive, & would require to be carefully gone into, but did not propose to postpone the completion. On Sept. 12, S. took with him a written protest against the bill & had two interviews with B., at which arrangements were made for completion. S. did not mention the subject of costs at either interview, but deposed that he had intended to do so at a third appointment on the same day, which B. did not keep. On Sept. 13, the parties met, the transfer was completed, & the bill of costs paid, B. refusing to part with the deeds unless it was paid. S. delivered his written protest, & it appeared that B. expressed willingness to reconsider his bill if any item were shown to be erroneous, but said nothing to the effect that it was to be treated as open to taxation. The mtgor. applied for taxation, alleging pressure & overcharge, but not referring to any specific items of overcharge. The judge made an order for taxation, & B. appealed:—Held: (1) (COTTON & FRY, L.J.J.) the order for taxation must be discharged, for as the shortness of the interval between the delivery of the bill & the time fixed for completion did not arise from any act of the mtgee.'s solr., but was owing only to the desire of the mtgor. for speedy completion, there was no pressure such as to justify taxation, though the case would have been otherwise if the mtgee. had been pressing for an early settlement; (2) (BOWEN, L.J.), the Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 41, authorises taxation after payment where there are special circumstances which, in the opinion of the judge, require the same; there was no inflexible rule that the special circumstances must be pressure with overcharge, or overcharge so gross as to amount to fraud; & in the present case, as the parties did not at completion treat the bill as finally settled, & B. had taken advantage of the inconvenience which a postponement of the settlement would have occasioned to the mtgor., there were special circumstances justifying taxation; (3) (BOWEN, L.J.), where a bill was so large as to be redolent of overcharge it was not necessary that specific items of overcharge should be pointed out; (4) (FRY, L.J.), though the bill appeared excessive, the ct. could not treat overcharge as shown, unless specific items were pointed out on which it could exercise its judgment.—Re BOYCOTT (1885), 29 Ch. 2015. ———.]—The "special circumstances" which, under Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 37, allow a solr.'s bill of costs to be referred for taxation, although twelve months have elapsed since it was delivered to the client, are not merely pressure & overcharge, or overcharge amounting to fraud. A judge has a discretion in ordering the bill of costs to be taxed, if it contains items unreasonably large, or charges requiring explanation, or gross blunders. Semble: the same principle ought to be applied to the taxation of a bill of costs which has been paid. Bills of costs delivered by a solr. contained the following charges: £735 for the costs of a reference, lasting six days; £83 for witnesses' expenses, none of which had been paid by the solr., but nearly the whole of which had been paid by the client; & £71 for shorthand notes of the proceedings at a reference where no professional shorthand writer had been employed, but the clerk to the solr. had taken the notes, & it did not appear that the solr. had given his clerk any part of the £71 charged. More than twelve months had elapsed since the bills were delivered:—Held: these charges constituted "special circumstances" within Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 37, which justified a judge in referring the bill for taxation.

The statute uses the words "special circumstances." Those are wide, comprehensive, & flexible words, & I think . . . that no ct. can or ought to lay down any exhaustive definition of them. Charges which in one case would be special circumstances, in another would not be such. It is for the discretion of the judge to say what all special circumstances in a particular case (LOPES, L.J.).—Re NORMAN (1886), 16 Q. B. D. 673; 54 L. T. 113; 34 W. R. 313; 2 T. L. 2066. Excessive charges by mortgagee's solicitor—On transfer of mortgage.]—The single fact that, upon a transfer of a mtge., a mere draft bill of costs of the mtgee.'s solr. is, for the first time, produced & then paid, is not of itself, without proof of pressure or fraud, a sufficient "special circumstance" to authorise taxation after payment, nor is that fact sufficient coupled with overcharges which are not so gross as to evidence fraud.—Re FYSON (1846), 9 Beav. 117; 50 E. 2067. Practice as to amount chargeable uncertain.]—In taxation, abstracts are ordinarily passed if they contain eight folios on an average; but the strict rule is that they should contain ten folios.

Taxation of a paid bill, sought on the ground of overcharge in abstracts containing less than ten folios refused, the practice being in uncertainty, & there being no pressure or surprise.—Re WALSH (1850), 12 Beav. 490; 50 E. R. 1148.

2068. Liability to pay disputed.]—A mtgor., without giving six months' notice, requested the mtgee. to accept payment & to transfer the mtge. The transfer being executed, the mtgee.'s solrs. refused to deliver it or the title deeds to the mtgor. without payment of their bill of costs. The mtgor.'s solr. objected to items amounting to less than £9 in all, but paid the full amount in order to obtain the deeds:—Held: the above were not such special circumstances as to subject the bill to taxation after payment; semble: one of the special circumstances required is overcharge & an item objected to, not because the business was not done or because the charge was excessive, but because the liability to pay it is disputed, is not such an overcharge as to be sufficient ground for taxing a paid bill.—*Re FINCH & SHEPHEARD, Ex p. E. said he thought one of the lessors had money to lend, & communicated the lessee's desire to him. The lessee & lessor met & arranged between them that £800 should be advanced upon mtge. of the property about to be purchased. E. acted as solr. in reference to the mtge. & purchase. He did not ask for or inspect any abstract of title on behalf of the mtgee., as the only title was that of the lessors, a copy of which had been given to the lessee. The purchase & mtge. were completed, & E. delivered a bill of costs, by which he charged the fees allowed by Sched. 1, Part 1, of the General Order under Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881 (c. 44), for negotiating loan & investigating title & preparing mtge. The bill was paid, & a summons was taken out after payment for taxation:—Held: (1) E. was not entitled to the scale fee for negotiating the loan, as he had done nothing more than bring the parties together; nor to that for investigating title, as there had been no investigation, & the overcharge in these respects was such as to constitute "special circumstances" justifying taxation after payment under Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 41; (2) it appearing that there had been a bargain between the client & E. previous to payment not to dispute the bill of costs, the summons was dismissed.—Re ELEY (1887), 37 Ch. One of four exors., a solr., acted in that capacity for testator during his life & for his exors., he being one of them, & afterwards, his costs were either during testator's lifetime, or subsequently, out of his estate fully satisfied & discharged. Twelve years had elapsed since the solr. had been dead, & twenty years since he had ceased to act as solr.; & there had been a decree in a suit instituted for the purpose of administering the estate of testator, in which the exor. of the solr. had or might have been called on to account for all sums of money paid to or retained by him out of the assets of testator in discharge of his bill of costs.

Upon a petition for taxation of these bills having been presented by the administratrix of testator's surviving exor.:—Held: in the absence of all proof of imposition or overcharge, it was not a case in which, under Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), the ct. ought to order a taxation of the bills as against the exor. of the solr.

(2) A solr. transacted the business of exors., his father, a retired solr., being one of them. Bills were made out & delivered to the father, who duly paid them, & receipts were given for the sums paid. Ten years after the last of such payments, the administratrix of the surviving exor. of testator presented a petition for taxation of those bills:—Held: as no reason had been given for the delay in presenting the petition, the mere relation in which the son stood towards his father, or the mode in which he was paid, either by a specific payment or by a credit given to the son by the father, did not constitute special circumstances within Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73), s. 41, so as to justify the ct. in ordering the taxation of the bills which had been already paid.

(3) A solr. from time to time, during a period of twelve years, received or retained money in liquidation of his costs due from the exors. of testator, to whom his father had been solr. & exor.:—Held: the delivery of the bills of costs not having been proved, the administratrix, of the surviving exor. was entitled to have an order for the delivery & taxation of such bills of costs.—*Re VINES & HOBBS, Ex p. ii. What Constitutes Undue Pressure.

2113. Degree of pressure—Taxation of costs before payment rendered impossible.—(1) To constitute a case for taxation of costs after payment on the ground of undue pressure, the pressure must have been of such a kind as to have rendered it impossible or difficult to have the costs taxed before payment in the ordinary course.

(2) An unexplained delay of nine months after payment in the presentation of a petition for taxation on such grounds held fatal to the application.

(3) To support such a petition, on the ground of extravagant & improper charges, the allegations directed to that point must be specific, & must be such as to amount to evidence of fraud.—*Re BROWNE, Ex p. Issue having been joined on the question of payment under compulsion:—Held: letters from the attorney of the party who had obtained judgment, threatening to enforce the same in case of non-payment, was evidence of compulsion.—STRANGE v. PHELAN (1850), 2 Ir. Jur. 84.—IR.

Sect. 5.—Taxation of costs: Sub-sect. 3, D. (c) ii.]

The relation of solr. & client continued after the payment. The ct. directed a taxation of the bill, notwithstanding this settlement, thinking that the client was, "to an alarming extent," in the power of the solr.; that the bill, which contained general items to a very considerable amount under the terms, "numerous attendances" & "innumerable attendances," was not sufficiently explanatory; that the solr. did not do all, which under the circumstances he ought to have done, to facilitate to the client the exercise of his right to a full statement of the particulars of the charge & to the proper investigation of each particular item; & "that the parties were on terms so unequal as to make it difficult to make any bargain which could be binding upon the client in the absence of other assistance." Where accounts & bills of costs of a solr. are delivered a sufficient time before the settlement to allow the client to examine them, & obtain advice & assistance respecting them, & the opportunity is taken advantage of, & the bills, being examined, objections are taken, upon discussion of which an allowance is made, a settlement come to, & the balance paid, prima facie, a taxation is precluded; but if, under the above circumstances, the client is in the power or at the mercy of the solr., if the bills delivered be not sufficiently explanatory, if the client, though having time to examine the bills has not been able to obtain, or has not been allowed to employ the most effective means of examination, if it appears that the solr. in whose power the client is, is driving a bargain with him on unequal terms, & that the relation of solr. & client & the power of the solr. continues, then all the circumstances above referred to as tending to establish the settlement may be unavailing.—NOKES v. WARTON (1842), 5 Beav. 448; 49 E. R. 651.

2117. Payment induced on completion of transaction—Refusal to allow execution until payment.]

—(1) If a solr. has refused to allow certain deeds to be executed until his bill of costs is paid, & the bill is paid under protest, & the deeds executed, this may constitute such a "special circumstance" as to induce the ct. to tax the bill under Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73).

The time for completion was Mar. 25, 1883, but it was arranged for the tenant's convenience that the completion should be six weeks earlier & that the property should be conveyed in two lots. He sent his draft conveyances for perusal before the end of Dec. On Feb. 2, 1883, the vendor's solrs. sent in their bill of costs in which they charged 30s. per cent. on the purchase money of each lot, considering that this was the proper charge under Schedule I. to the general rules under Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881 (c. 44), which provides that amount of remuneration to a vendor's solr. "for deducing title to freehold copyhold or leasehold property & perusing & completing conveyance, including preparation of contract or conditions of sale, if any." The purchaser's solrs. objected to these charges, but the vendor's solrs. refused to allow completion unless they were paid, & on Feb. 14 the purchaser paid them under protest & completed the purchase. After this he applied for taxation of the bill:—Held: the case was governed by the new Rules but that the bill was framed on an erroneous footing, for that the ad valorem remuneration authorised by Schedule I. was chargeable only where the whole of the business in respect of which it was imposed, viz. the deducing title & perusing & completing conveyance, was done; here as there was no deducing of title, but only perusal & completion of the conveyances, Schedule I. did not apply but that under the General Order, rule 2 (c), the solr.'s remuneration was to be regulated by the old system as modified by Schedule II., but having regard to the dates there was no pressure & there was no overcharge amounting to fraud, & there were therefore no special circumstances to authorise taxation after payment.—Re LACEY & SON (1883), 25 Ch. Petitioner was much in want of money, & the purchaser had come from some distance to attend the appointment. for settlement, & that he would have the bills taxed. After some further delay, the solr. gave a written notice requiring payment on the following day, & stating that if the money were not paid he should take possession under the deed. The money not being paid, he accordingly caused possession to be taken, whereupon the whole amount claimed for bills of costs, advances & interest was paid by the client under protest. Under these circumstances, the client presented a petition for taxation, alleging various instances of overcharge in the bills of costs, & that they were paid under undue pressure. One of the Vice-Chancellors refused to order taxation; but upon appeal it was held that payment under these circumstances did not preclude the client's right to taxation; the rule was, that to tax a bill after payment the client must show either undue pressure or overcharge amounting to fraud, & this case falling within the former branch of the rule, the bills must be taxed.—*Re FOSTER, Ex p. B. in 1819, failed, from circumstances not involving the merits of the question: some attempts at a compromise were made from time to time; & the client was obliged on three or four occasions to leave England, in order to attend to urgent business in foreign countries; but at length, in 1824, a motion was made to have the bills referred for taxation, supported by evidence that some of the items of charge were improper; the ct. ordered that the bill last delivered should be taxed generally, & that the five antecedent bills should be referred to the master, with a direction that the client should deliver to the solr. a schedule of the items complained of, & that the master should exercise as large a discretion as he might think fit with respect to the evidence on which he should proceed in forming his judgment concerning these items.—*SCOUGALL v. (3) An attorney's bill had been delivered to some ignorant parties in June, 1840, & in Nov. 1842, a summons for its taxation had been dismissed by a judge at chambers, on the ground of the insufficiency of the materials on which it was founded. It appeared that a sum of money had been deposited in 1839, in the joint names of the attorney & another party, on behalf of the clients:—Held: there being a dispute respecting the sum, the ct. would refer the bill, & require the attorney to account on a rule nisi obtained in Trinity term, 1843.—*BINNS v. A release was extended, but, the cestui que trust not having had any independent professional assistance on the occasion, the ct. relieved him from the professional charges, beyond costs out of pocket.—*TODD v. 2173. Dispute as to completeness of bill—Employment of country solicitors.]—The clients of a town solr., on the delivery of his bill of costs, objected that it was not complete, inasmuch as it did not contain items in respect of business done by a country solr., whom the clients designated as the town solr.'s agent, but whom the town solr. claimed a right to treat as having been employed directly by the clients. More than a twelvemonth after the delivery of the bill the clients presented a petition to have it taxed:—Held: the dispute as to the completeness of the bill was a special circumstance rendering it fit to direct a taxation after the lapse of twelve months.—Re BAGSHAW, Ex p. HUDDERSFIELD & MANCHESTER RAILWAY & CANAL CO. (1848), 2 De G. & Sm. 205; 11 L. T. O. S. 43; 12 Jur. 510; 64 E. R. 91.

2174. —. Particulars of agency charges.]—Upon an application to tax a bill of costs after the expiration of twelve months from the date of the delivery of the bill, on the ground that certain items for agency charges are treated as disbursements, & no particulars of them are given, it must appear on the face of the bill that appct. has not been furnished with such detailed information as will enable him to form a fair opinion as to whether he ought to proceed upon a taxation or not. When such items taken together do not represent a substantial part of the whole bill the ct. will hesitate to order a taxation on the ground that the bill is incomplete; but when such items bear a substantial proportion to the amount due under a separate heading in a particular matter which forms a part of the whole bill, the ct. will not limit an order for taxation to the particular matter, but will regard the whole bill as incomplete & taxable.—Re POMEROY & TANNER (1897), 76 L. T. 261.

In our opinion the submission to pay is not really necessary in any case, for sect. 43 of the Act [Solicitors Act, 1843 (c. 73)] enables an order to be made in any Division for payment of the certified balance. . . . On a petition for delivery of the bills & taxation by a party beneficially interested in the residuary estate, the delivery of the cheques by A. to B. was held to be a payment, & more than a year having elapsed since payment of two of the bills, delivery & taxation were refused; but as to the third payment having been made within the year, it was ordered to be delivered by a given time, & the petition as to taxation, etc., was ordered to stand over till after delivery to give petitioner an opportunity of considering whether taxation would be desirable. 2229. — Material facts suppressed—Lapse of previous order.]—When a client has obtained the common order to tax his solr.'s bill, if he allows the time thereby limited for the making of the certificate, to elapse without taking any proceedings under the order, he is not entitled to obtain a second order of course, suppressing the fact that he has obtained the first order.

On June 27, a client commenced an action in the Q. B. Div. against his solr., claiming £75 as money received by the solr. for his use. On July 1 the solr. delivered his bill of costs to the client. On July 17 the solr. delivered his defence in the action, claiming to set off against the client's demand professional charges to the amount of £90, & some other items amounting to £31, in respect of which he claimed indemnity from the client. On July 30, issue was joined in the action. On Oct. 1 the client, suppressing the existence of the action, obtained ex parte in the Ch. Div. the common order to tax the solr.'s bill. The order was not served on the solr. till Oct. 29, & no proceedings were taken under it before it became inoperative by reason of the expiration of the month thereby limited for the making of the taxing master's certificate. On Feb. 11, the action not having been yet tried, the client, suppressing the existence of the action & the making of the former order to tax, obtained ex parte in the Ch. Div. a second common order to tax the solr.'s bill. Upon a motion by the solr. to discharge this order for irregularity :—Held : the second order had been obtained irregularly, & by means of a suppression of material facts, & the client must pay the costs of the motion to discharge it.—Re WEBSTER, [1891] 2 Ch. 102 ; 60 L. 2230. What court will consider—Regularity of order—Not merits.]—Where the common order for the taxation of a solr.'s bill of costs has been obtained ex p., & the solr. applies to discharge it, on the ground, that the order ought to have been obtained on special application, the ct. will not enter into the merits, further than to decide on the regularity of the order; & will not, even if the facts warrant it, then make a special order for taxation: such order must be the subject of another application by the client.—GREGG v. TAYLOR (1838), 1 Beav. 123; 8 L. J. Ch. 98; 48 E. R. 885.

2231. ———.]—An order of course for taxation cannot be supported on merits as a special order, upon the occasion of a motion to discharge it.

Qu.: whether the taxation, at the instance of a cestui que trust, of a bill of costs which has been long since settled & paid by trustees out of a trust fund, ought to take place as against the solr. or as against the trustees for the purpose of justifying their payment.—GROVE v. SANSOM (1838), 1 Beav. 297; 48 E. R. 954.

An irregular order for taxation may be waived, but it must be done in some clear & unequivocal manner.—Re MACKRILL (1847), 11 Beav. 42; 50 E. R. 732.

2233. ——— What amounts to waiver—Proceeding under order.]—Order for taxing a bill of costs, entitled in the cause, if obtained by a party to the cause, regular, under the general jurisdiction. But a person, not a party in the cause, must apply ex p. under 2 Geo. 3, c. 23, s. 22. Such an irregularity would be waived by proceeding under the order.—BIGNOL v. BIGNOL (1805), 11 Ves. 328; 32 E. R. 1114, L. C.

2235. ———.]—An order for taxation was to be void, unless the master made his report in a fortnight, or certified that further time was necessary. The time elapsed without such certificate, & the parties afterwards attended several times before the master without objecting:—Held: the irregularity had been waived, & an order was made for the master to proceed in the taxation.—Re FIELD (1853), 16 Beav. 593; 51 E. R. 909.

(2) The ct. is unwilling to interfere with the discretion exercised by a judge at chambers as to costs.—SHERIFF v. GRESLEY (LADY) (1835), 4 Ad. & El. 338; 111 E. R. 814; sub nom. SHERIFF v. GRESLEY (LADY), 1 Har. & W. 588; 5 Nev. & M. K. B. 491; 5 L. J. K. B. 7.

2238. ———.]—In Feb. 1917, the client obtained an order of course to tax his solr.'s bill on application made within one month from delivery. The order contained no submission to pay & no direction for delivery of papers, but contained an unqualified prohibition against the commencement of any proceedings by the solr. in respect of the bill pending the reference. A reference was made to a taxing master, but the client did not proceed further under the order, & the solr. alleged on oath that he believed that the client obtained the order with the sole view of delaying payment & had no intention of proceeding under the order. The solr. now moved to set aside the order for irregularity on the ground that the words restraining the commencement of proceedings by the solr. were erroneously inserted or in the alternative that these words might be struck out or in the further alternative that notwithstanding the order, he might be at liberty to commence proceedings against the client:—Held: (1) the application in the circumstances was not too late; (2) the unqualified prohibition against the commencement of proceedings by the solr. pending the reference was in accordance with the established form of order on the client's application within one month from delivery & the order could not be set aside for irregularity, but having regard to the uncontradicted evidence that the client was using it for the purpose of delay, the ct., under its inherent jurisdiction to prevent abuse of its orders, was entitled to direct, as it did, that unless the client obtained an appointment to tax within fourteen days the order should be discharged.—Re PLUMMER, [1917] 2 Ch. 432; 86 L. J. Ch. 702; 117 L. T. 561; 61 Sol. Jo. 694.

2239. When costs disallowed—F frivolous objection.]—In obtaining the common order for taxation the grounds of the application should be truly stated, & if they are inaccurately stated the common order will be discharged.

Hence, where A. agreed to let premises to B., & B. agreed to pay all the expenses attending the making of the lease, C., the solr. employed by A., having delivered his bill to B., the latter applied for the common order to tax, alleging, among other things, that he had employed C., whereas it was only in consequence of the agreement that C. delivered his bill to B. at all. The ct. discharged the order for irregularity, but because of the frivolous nature of the objection discharged it without costs, expressing regret that in that way only could its disapprobation be marked.—Re GABRIEL (1846), 10 Beav. 45; 8 L. T. O. S. 182; 50 E. R. 499.

The clients afterwards obtained the common order for taxation against the solr. himself, notwithstanding the deed. He thereupon gave them notice of the deed, but went in before the taxing master & opposed the taxation. There was a balance due from him.

2265. — Direction by arbitrator as to costs.]—The rule, that on application for orders of course all material facts must be stated, is to be strictly adhered to.

Upon an arbn. between A. & B., A.'s costs were directed to be paid by B., & were moderated by the arbitrator & paid. A. afterwards obtained an order of course to tax his solrs.' bills of costs, suppressing these facts. The order was discharged.—Re WINTERBOTTOM (1851), 15 Beav. 80; 51 E. R. 466.

2266. Proceedings taken in name of third party—Order obtained in respect of mortgage transaction.]—A. employed a solr. in the matter of a mtge., & there was a dispute between them, whether he was not also liable for the costs of legal proceedings taken in the name of a third party. A. obtained ex parte at the Rolls an order for taxation: he stated, however, the mtge. transaction alone, & suppressed the other matters. It was discharged on the ground of the suppression.—Re WALKER (1851), 14 Beav. 227; 51 E. R. 274.

2267. Receipt given by solicitor.]—A solr. consented to take a less sum than the sum claimed by him for his bill of costs, & it was agreed between him & his client that same should be received & taken in full of all demands, & the solr. gave his client a receipt, stating the sum so received to be in full of all demands. The client afterwards, but within the time allotted by the Act, obtained the common order to tax his solr.'s bill, but did not state that the receipt had been given by the solr. & received by him:—Held: the common order could not be sustained whatever might be the case as to a special order, & the common order was discharged with costs.—Re HUNT (1851), 18 L. T. O. S. 82.

An order of course for taxation discharged, on the ground of the suppression of the fact that there had been a previous order of the Q. B. for taxation, upon terms which had not been complied with, & a subsequent application to the Exchequer for taxation, which had been refused.—Re GEDYE (1852), 15 Beav. 254; 21 L. J. Jo. 127.

2271. Settlement of account.]—In Dec. an account was signed by a client, one item of which was the amount of a bill of costs previously delivered. The balance was paid over a month after. Four months afterwards the client, suppressing the settlement, obtained an order of course to tax. It was discharged.—Re HOLLAND (1854), 19 Beav. 314; 23 L. T. O. S. 203; 2 W. R. 514; 52 E. 2273. Agreement to refer to Law Society—Particular item in bill.]—An agreement was made to pay reasonable & proper costs, & a bill of costs was delivered. The only real question was whether the negotiation fee was properly chargeable. It was agreed to refer the question to the council of the Law Society, & a case was submitted to resps. for approval. Resps. said they would have altered the case by stating that no negotiation in fact took place, & refused to proceed with the reference, & obtained the common order to tax. For appcts. it was said that an order of course would not have been made if the agreement to refer had been disclosed. Resps. said that only a special agreement going to the whole bill required to be mentioned, not an agreement as to one item even if such an agreement was in fact concluded:—Held: the test was that stated in Re Gedge, No. 2268, ante: Was the matter omitted of sufficient moment & importance to require grave consideration or discussion? Only matters of real moment & importance require to be mentioned, & the fact that at one time the parties intended to refer the question to the Law Society was not such a matter.—*Re COLLYER-BRISTOW, RUSSELL, HILL & Co., Ex p. & J., on Nov. 3, & by other deft., I., on Nov. 7. On Nov. 7, the first instalment was paid to pltf.'s attorney's clerk, who had no authority to receive it; & subsequently, on that day, judgment was signed; on Nov. 8, notice was given to tax costs on Nov. 9, which, at the request of one of defts. was postponed till Nov. 10. On the morning of Nov. 10, defts.' attorney received a notice to attend the taxation of costs at two o'clock that day; he did not attend, & the costs were taxed in this absence:—Held: the judgment was regular, the execution of I., on Nov. 7, related back to Nov. 3; the acceptance of the instalment by the clerk without authority did not waive the default, & it was unnecessary under the circumstances, to give a full day's notice to tax costs on Nov. 10.

A warrant was afterwards regularly served for July 31, subscribed “to complete the taxation.” The client did not attend; but, the master being informed of the former irregularity, retaxed so much of the bills as had been taxed on July 21:—Held: the client not having attended the warrant of July 31, could not set up the irregularity of July 21.—Re MOURILYAN (1848), 11 Beav. 48; 50 E. 2305. To assess lump sum in lieu of taxation.]—The discretion given to taxing officers by R. S. C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (38A), to assess a lump sum for costs in lieu of taxation, is a very delicate one, to be exercised judicially & only when special circumstances justify that course, & then only on evidence; & if a taxing officer proceeds under the sub-rule, it is his duty to state in his certificate that he has assessed under the sub-rule, & to give his reasons for doing so.

A taxing officer stated in his certificate that he had taxed a bill of costs at a certain figure, but he had in fact proceeded under the sub-rule & had assessed a lump sum for costs in lieu of taxation. On summons to review without carrying in objections:—Held: the taxing officer had proceeded on a wrong principle, & the bill of costs must go back for taxation.—*Re JOHNSTON, MILLS v. Between the date of the settlement & the time of the death of the client various sums accrued due in respect of interest on the moneys so lent out, & in respect of which, though not received in the lifetime of the client, advances were made to her by the solr. as if they were. R. 498.—CAN.

r. ———.]—An attorney can obtain an order in taxation of his costs although he knows that his client disputes the retainer as to the whole bill.—

t. Order obtained by client—Right to dispute retainer—Power to order production & affidavit of documents by solicitor.—Upon taxation of bills of costs rendered by solrs., where the retainer is disputed & the taxing officer is inquiring as to it, he has power, under Rule 757, to direct the solrs. not only to produce all documents in their custody, possession or power, but to make & file an affidavit stating that the documents produced are all those in their custody, possession or power.—Re SOLICITORS, [1926] 1 D. L. R. 428; 58 O. L. R. 177.—CAN.

Sect. 5.—Taxation of costs: Sub-sect. 10, E. (g), & F.; sub-sect. 11, A., B. & C.]

(g) Where Negligence Alleged.

2340. Power of master to inquire into.]—Although the master, on taxation, has not jurisdiction to determine whether acts done by the attorney were useful, he may determine what were necessary.—HEALD v. HALL (1833), 2 Dowl. 163.

2341. ———.]—Upon the petition of the administratrix of an assignee to have two bills of costs taxed, having regard to acts of unskilfulness & negligence charged against the solr. : & one of the bills having been incurred in bkpcy. & the other at law ; & an order having been made by a judge at law, referring the latter for taxation, but declining to refer the former, which had been taxed by the comr. :—Held : the costs incurred in bkpcy. should be referred for taxation in the ordinary way, but the costs at law were not within the jurisdiction of this ct. for taxation.

This ct. will not direct the taxing officers, in taxing a solr.'s bill of costs, to have regard to acts of imputed negligence, except, as in the case of Re Southall, Ex p. Southall, No. 2295, ante, where the bill of costs constituted petitioning creditor's debt.—Re BILLINTON, Ex p. BILLINTON (1840), 10 L. J. Bey. 13 ; 4 Jur. 1140.

2342. ———.]—On taxation of an attorney's bill, the master has no jurisdiction to disallow items on the ground that in respect of the business to which they refer, the attorney was guilty of negligence.

Where A. & B. delivered a bill in their joint names for business done as attorneys, & the master, on taxation, disallowed part of the bill, on the ground that B. was not a certificated attorney during a portion of the time to which the bill referred, the ct., on affidavit that B.'s name was used at the request of friends, but that he was really not a partner with A., allowed A. to deliver a fresh bill in his own name only for the items so disallowed.—MATCHETT v. PARKES (1842), 9 M. & W. 767 ; 11 L. J. Ex. 287 ; 152 E. R. 325. Annotation :—Expld. Re Massey & Carey (1884), 26 Ch. D.

2343. Sufficiency.] —COLE v. SUTHERLAND (DUKE) & BARKER (1845), 4 L. T. O. S. 355.

2344. Error in allocatur—Right of party aggrieved.]—If there is an error in casting up the amount after taxation, & the error is not brought under the attention of the master before he makes his allocatur, the party damnified by the error has no right himself to set it right, but should apply to the judge or the master.—LEVY v. DREW (1847), 2 New Pract. Cas. 394 ; 2 Saund. & C. 142 ; 10 L. T. O. S. 170 ; 12 Jur. 119.

2345. Time for making—Extension of time—Discretion of master.]—The common form of order for taxation of a bill of costs, when the order is made upon the application of the client after the expiration of one month but before the expiration of twelve months from the delivery of the bill, provides that the taxing master "is to make his certificate in a month, unless the master shall extend the time to enable him to make his certificate, or this order is to be of no effect."

Upon the construction of the order for taxation read in conjunction with R. S. C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (57), the taxing master had power to grant an extension of the time after the expiration of the month appointed by the order for the making of his certificate.

The power of the taxing master to extend the time under an order in this form ought not to be exercised as of course or freely.—Re MACINTOSH & THOMAS, [1903] 2 Ch. 394 ; 72 L. J. Ch. 609 ; 88 L. T. 820 ; 51 W. R. 659 ; 47 Sol. Jo. 604, C. A. Annotations :—Reid. R. v. Lewis, [1906] 2 K. B. 307 ; Re Plummer, [1917] 2 Ch. 432.

Right of party to carry in objection—After signing allocatur.]—See No. 2368, post.

SUB-SECT. 11.—REVIEW OF TAXATION.

A. In General.

See R. S. C., Ord. 65, r. 27 (41), (42).

2346. Effect of delay.]—An attorney who, in his affidavit of increase on taxing costs, represents that he has paid money to witnesses in the cause when he has not in fact paid it, though he may have taken steps for doing so, or who, without proper ground, makes statements tending to heighten the costs payment to witnesses, with intent to favour such witnesses or to oppress the opposite party, commits an offence for which, on a timely application, he may be punished by the ct. But, where the losing party in a cause complained that the adverse attorney has claimed payments for the production of maps by witnesses at the trial, which maps, it was said, were not in fact produced, & of a counterpart, produced by a witness but not used or required ; also for money alleged to have been paid by the attorney to a witness, whereas such money was not paid till long after the affidavit of increase was sworn ; but such complaint was not made till nearly a year & a half after the taxation, complainant's attention having been drawn to the subject recently & by accident :—Held : it was too late, unless upon a very strong case, to bring such details before the ct. as charges to be answered by an attorney ; & a rule to answer matters was refused.—DOE d. MENCE v. HADLEY (1851), 17 Q. B. 571 ; 117 E. R. 1400 ; sub nom. DOE d. MENTZ v. HADLEY, 18 L. T. O. S. 93.

2347. After compromise of cause—No objection taken to items.]—If, upon taxation of an attorney's bill of costs before a master, a party does not object to certain items expecting the bill to be paid by the other side, he shall not be allowed, after the case has been compromised, & he has himself to pay the costs so taxed, to come & say that they were improperly allowed.—PARKER v. GREAT WESTERN RY. CO. (1852), 20 L. T. O. S. 52.

2348. Adjournment to chambers—General objection to allocatur of chief clerk—Only some items in dispute.]—On a general objection being taken to a Chief Clerk's certificate, where some only of the items were in dispute the case was adjourned to
